CONGRESS.

THE SENATE ADJOURNED UNTIL TUESDAY.

Desultory Discussion in the House.

Speech of Mr. Farnsworth, of Illinois.

THE SENATE PRINTING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 23.

An impression having prevailed that the President would communicate to Congress, to-day, his Annual Message, an immense crowd was drawn to the Capitol; but when his private Secretary appeared at the bar of the Senate and announced several communications in writing, and the only document heard of is was the nomination of several Postmasters, the disappointed crowd then poured into the galleries of the House, to witness the scenes of disorder there.

The Senate transacted no business of interest, but went into an executive session for a few moments, after which a caucus was held to nominate a Senate Printer. Ten Democratic Senators absented themselves, leaving only twenty-two to ballot; of these only nineteen votes were cast for BOWMAN, who was declared to be nominated. The dissenting members intimated their intention to oppose the nomination in the Senate, as Bowman received only nineteen votes. The impression is that he will be badly beaten, in spite of the efforts of the Senate to indorse him.

The speech of Mr. FARNSWORTH to-day was made in opposition to a written request of his party friends. Sixty Republicans signed the paper requesting him to hold his tongue, yet speak he would, to their infinite annoyance. A proposition was made that the Republicans should leave the hall in a body if he attempted to speak, and thus rebuke his vanity and violation of the Republican policy to vote, vote, vote. Many did leave, and THADDEUS STEVENS declared that FARNSWORTH's speech had lost them the organization.

The only interesting feature of to-day's proceedings was the declaration on the part of the Southern leaders that the South did not desire the renewal of the Slave-trade, nor would she agitate the question. These gentlemen were in favor of the strict observance of all laws until repealed or declared unconstitutional by proper authorities. A better tone prevailing on the Southern side of the hall, Mr. SEWARD, of Ohio, said he would then take occasion to say that he and his constituents repudiated and abhorred the insurrectionary sentiments contained in HELPER's book, and that there were more men inside the Penitentiary than outside of it who would indorse them.

The ballots to-day exhibit no change in the position of parties. The South-Americans have no idea of accepting KEITT's proposition, although Mr. NELSON, of Tennessee, in noticing what he termed a false and libellous attack of the States, said he would support a National Democrat whenever his vote would elect him. Several of them will never do so, preferring to vote for SHERMAN, if the choice has to be made. Some now express hope that an election will be made by the middle of January. Gen. DAVIS, of Mississippi, proposed in good faith that all should resign, as they could not organize, and suffer another Congress to be elected. All motions to adjourn for the holidays were opposed by Democrats and Republicans. "Extra Billy" SMITH, of Virginia, has the floor for to-morrow morning. Mr. SMITH, and those who is responsible for the postponement of the public service.

Judge ROCKWELL will be tendered the District Attorneyship, vice PARKER, declined.

The Senate have sent for BEALE, Brown's Secretary of State, who is now in Austin, Texas.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 23.

Secretary COBB decided to-day that members of Congress are not entitled to receive their pay until the amounts due shall be certified by the Speaker as correct, as is required by the act of 1818. The law of 1856 does not repeal the other act, and the Secretary says:

"Knowing the jealousy which very properly exists between the different departments of the Government, I should require a very strong case before I should assume, as a branch of the Executive Department, that the legislative department intended to transfer from their own to the Executive Department, the right to pass upon the amount of their compensation and mileage."

This decision does not seem to be relished by many of the members who have exhausted their means. Col. GLOSSBRENNER, I understand, will endeavor to provide, on his own individual account, for their pressing necessities.

The Senatorial Democratic caucus met to-day, and the nomination of Gen. BOWMAN was insisted upon by the friends of the President, as a vindication from the charges made against him by Mr. WEBNELL. Nineteen Senators thereupon voted for him, but Senators BROWN, CLAY, CRITTENDEN, CHESNUT, IVERSON, JOHNSON of Tennessee, PUGH and TOOMBS left the caucus, refusing to be bound by its actions, and saying that they would unite on this question with the twenty-six Opposition Senators rather than submit to the appointment. It is said that the friends of Senator HUNTER complain that unfair advantage has been taken of him in this matter by the President's friends.

Last night Mr. BUCHANAN had resolved to send his Message to the Senate and House to-day, but his friends called on him and remonstrated until he yielded. Such a step would have made any fusion with the Anti-Lecompton men and South Americans impossible.

There will be no adjournment of the House for the holidays, but there may possibly be a two days' recess.

E. G. FAIRBY's bail, at Savannah, Ga., has been put at $20,000.

[FROM THE REPORTER FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 23.

A Postal Convention has been executed between the Postmaster-General and the Minister of Belgium, establishing a regular exchange of correspondence in closed mails, between the United States and Belgium, to be conveyed via England once a week or oftener, and in coincidence, as far as possible, with the regular sailing of the Anglo-American steamers. The single rate for letters and samples of merchandise originating in the United States, and destined for Belgium, or vice versa, is fixed at 27 cents; of which pre-payment is optional in either country. There are also provisions for printed matter. The transmission of closed mails under this Convention is to commence on the 21st of January next. Provision is also made for the direct exchange of mails between the two countries by means of any direct lines of mail steamers which may hereafter be established between the United States and Belgium, at the combined single rate of 15 cents for each letter or packet not exceeding half an ounce in weight, and prepayment being optional.

The Hon. Judge MASON, of Iowa, late Commissioner of Patents, has become connected with the New-York Scientific American.

The Augusta Constitutionalist, of the 21st, says that the Medical College of Georgia has resolved to invite Southern students at the North to finish their course of instruction there free. A bill has passed both branches of the Legislature of South Carolina, suspending, till June, 1861, the law requiring one dollar in specie to be in the vaults of the Banks in the State to every dollar in circulation.

In the Democratic Senatorial Caucus to-day, after a full discussion of the charges against Gen. BOWMAN, of the Constitution newspaper, he was nominated as Printer to that body, by a vote of 22 against 6.

The Senate, in Executive Session to-day, confirmed the following nominations: N. B. BROWN, Postmaster at Philadelphia; ISAAC F. HAYES, Postmaster at Buffalo; Mr. VARNUM, Postmaster at Cincinnati; and Mr. HENRY, Commissioner of Patents.

The indications are that there will be no quorum in the Senate until Tuesday week, the 3d of January, and consequently it is not probable that the President's Message will be communicated prior to that time.

Mr. BARING and several others of the most prominent Bankers in London have made a joint appeal to the British Cabinet to recognise the Constitutional Government of Mexico. Lord John RUSSELL appointed the 6th of December for any official interview with these gentlemen and it was believed that the British Government was favorable to the appeal.

The Legislature of Virginia, by a joint resolution, has accepted the flag presented that Commonwealth by the citizens of Philadelphia, viewing it as a renewal of the evidence of its heroic sires' devoted patriotism.

The vote for Speaker to-day shows that Mr. SHERMAN, on Revisers, lacked four votes of election. Fifty-three votes were scattered among twenty-four gentlemen, none of whom received more than eight votes, and fourteen of them only one each.

Col. DAVIS and staff have arrived here with a large amount of ordnance stores, on the way to Richmond. Only one company remains on guard at Charlestown, Va. Quiet is entirely restored.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 23.

Mr. PUGH introduced a bill relative to the Louisville and Portland Canal.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill to provide for a temporary Government, and to create the office of Surveyor-General for the Territory of Arizona; also, a bill directing the manner in which the testimony of certain judicial officers may be taken for the use of United States Courts.

Executive Session.

After the Executive session the Senate adjourned till Tuesday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 23.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, (Rep.,) being entitled to the floor, said that he was willing to give way for a motion to proceed to vote.

Mr. RUFFIN, of North Carolina, (Dem.,) and other Democratic members objected, insisting on Mr. FARNSWORTH either proceeding with his remarks or abandoning the floor altogether.

Mr. FARNSWORTH said he made the proposition in good faith. He did not desire to place any impediment in the way of organization. He and his Republican friends had been here nearly three weeks, desirous and anxious to vote for a Speaker. They had no disposition to discuss the Slavery question now, but would wait till an organization was effected. He spoke for himself, and did not want the Republican Party held responsible for his utterances. He said they had been met here with speeches and resolutions in regard to HELPER's pamphlet and a speech of Gov. SEWARD. These things were thrust in their faces with a threatened dissolution of the Union on their account, and it was even threatened here that if a Republican Speaker be elected, the Union will be severed instanter. He proceeded to read from the Richmond Enquirer—a leading Democratic paper, edited by Messrs. RITCHIE, FAYSS and DUNNIVANT—of June 1857, and May and June 1856, to show that that journal had uttered "irrepressible conflict" doctrines, and pronounced free society a failure; and had said that a war between the two systems will rage everywhere until the one conquers and the other is exterminated. Mr. SEWARD, he said, never uttered "irrepressible conflict" doctrines half as strong as that. Senator HAMMOND, he added, had presented similar sentiments in regard to such a conflict. He denied the authority of any members holding him responsible for indorsing HELPER's book. It was none of their business. He read such books as he pleased. There was nothing in his part of the country which would not stand the test of free discussion and criticism. He proceeded to arraign the Democratic Party for indorsing a book called Black Diamonds, written by Mr. POLLARD, of Virginia, and caused to be read various testimonials in its favor, adding that the writer advocates the going into Africa, and seizing and deluding the natives to gain their consent to be shipped to this country by the middle passage as apprentices, and after getting them here, to induce them to live in perpetual bondage. The writer admits it would be an infraction and a violation of the laws of the United States, but justifies it by the necessities of the case, and that the Union could be preserved only by this so-called conservative policy. Is this the sentiment of the Democratic Party?

Mr. COBB, of Alabama, (Dem.)—I deprecate the re-opening of the slave-trade. Now, you speak out, and say whether you indorse HELPER's book.

Mr. FARNSWORTH would like to ask Mr. MILES, of South Carolina, (Dem.,) the question whether he indorsed those sentiments?

Mr. MILES replied, he most heartily, utterly, and from the bottom of his heart deprecated any evasion of the law. [Applause.] He recognized the higher law of sentiment and honor which compelled him to obey the Constitution.

Mr. FARNSWORTH wanted to know whether he was in favor of re-opening the trade by a repeal of the laws.

Mr. MILES replied that he was not prepared to say whether he was in favor of re-opening the slave-trade at some future time, but as the laws of the land forbid engaging in the traffic, he believed it was useless to discuss the question so long as the South remains in the confederacy. No man there believed in the present Union. The slave-trade can be re-opened legally, and no one advocates re-opening it illegally. He should like to ask Mr. FARNSWORTH whether he was in favor of the repeal of the Fugitive Slave Law.

Mr. FARNSWORTH replied that he would answer that question bye-and-bye.

Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, (Dem.) remarked that he had come out of the canvass on that issue, and was opposed to the re-opening of the Slave-trade in or out of the Union, and in favor of law, order and justice; Now, do you indorse the doctrines of HELPER's book? Answer like a man. [Applause.]

The Clerk checked the disorderly manifestations.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, (Rep.,) felt it his duty to say for himself and those he represented, that so far as HELPER's book advises servile insurrection, he utterly abhorred and detested it. There were not as many men out as in the Penitentiary of Ohio who would tolerate it for a moment.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois, (Rep.,) expressed his gratification at the turn the discussion had taken. He thought it could now be said that his colleague could proceed with his remarks. He knew his colleague would be frank and plain.

Mr. BONHAM, of South Carolina, (Dem.,) said the Act of 1820, which characterized the Slave-trade as piracy, was a blot on the statute-book, and ought to be expunged; but he knew of no party in the South in favor of having the law of 1819 repealed. With regard to the latter, he was not prepared to say it is unconstitutional. There was no considerable part of the South, or the Democratic Party, who agitated the question of reopening the trade. It can never be done in the Confederacy. As to whether he was in favor of reopening the trade, at a future time, he was not prepared to say.

Mr. FARNSWORTH—Does the gentleman indorse the sentiment in the book Black Diamonds, for the revival of the Slave-trade by law?

Mr. BONHAM—It is impracticable. I do not stand in the attitude of one who indorses the violation of any existing law.

Mr. FARNSWORTH asked Mr. MCRAE whether he indorsed the sentiment.

Mr. MCRAE, of Mississippi, (Dem.,) as an individual was in favor of reopening the trade, but this was not the position of the Democratic Party in Mississippi or any other Southern State. He was, however, for the faithful execution of the laws as they stand, against the re-opening of that traffic.

Mr. FARNSWORTH did not think such a design could be fixed on National Democrats, any more than that it could be justly charged that the Republicans indorsed the acts of JOHN BROWN.

Mr. MCRAE believed he was the only member of the Democratic Party in Mississippi who entertained that opinion.

Mr. FARNSWORTH asked Mr. CRAWFORD, of Georgia, (Dem.,) if he indorsed the reopening of the Slave-trade as recommended in HELPER's book.

Mr. CRAWFORD replied that he had never read that book.

Mr. FARNSWORTH asked whether he was in favor of reopening the Slave-trade?

Mr. CRAWFORD replied, that under a particular state of circumstances he would, but at present he opposed it, as did the Democratic Party of Georgia.

Mr. FARNSWORTH said it had been asked whether he indorsed HELPER's book. He had never read it entirely, and had never seen a copy till he came to the House. So far as any pages in that book could be fairly construed into encouraging insurrection and emancipation by violence, he did not indorse it. He was, however, in favor of the insertion of such doctrines as lead to peaceful emancipation. He thought some passages of that book badly expressed and worded, and that they could not be justified. But in so far as that book quotes the language of JEFFERSON, MADISON, MASON, JAY, HAMILTON, PINKNEY, and other great lights of the revolution, he indorsed it. The purpose to which gentlemen on the other side will direct it, is the doctrines of Judge KANE, in opinions delivered by such judicial representatives. So far as slavery exists in the States, he did not believe in conferring power to interfere concerning it.

Mr. KELLOGG rose in reference to the fact that it was only the morning that he saw a copy of a letter in Gov. WISE, stating that some Abolitionists in Chicago had actually been in correspondence with persons in Ohio and the New-England States to go to the rescue of Old John BROWN.

Mr. FARNSWORTH—Will you give the name of the writer of the letter?

Mr. WISE—If I had it I could not give it, for the letter might have been confidentially written. The gentleman had said that there was not one of his constituents who would make a raid in Virginia, and hence I referred to the fact of such a letter being written.

Mr. FARNSWORTH replied that the letter might be a hoax.

After some further colloquy on this point, Mr. LAMAR, of Mississippi, (Dem.,) said he always had been opposed to the reopening of the African slave trade. He was in the Senate when Mr. SEWARD announced the doctrine which had such a startling effect on the South, that as soon as this administration shall pass away the Abolitionists would get control to overthrow Southern institutions and remodel the Supreme Court, so that its decisions should be against the interests of the South. Mr. SEWARD said he expected that in his lifetime there would not be the foot of a single slave on this Continent. While Mr. SEWARD uttered this as his deliberate opinion, his form dilated, and his pale face was expressive of bad and malignant passion, and his eyes glowed as if the fire of hell were burning in his heart.

Mr. FARNSWORTH (earnestly)—God grant that I, too, may see the day when the foot of a slave will not rest on this continent!

Mr. BOWMAN (in his seat)—You'll never see it.

Mr. FARNSWORTH said that it was the wish of Washington—it was the doctrine of the men who made the Republic, and of the men who will continue the Republic's existence. But this did not indorse the raid of John BROWN. As to the Fugitive Slave law, he said his people would not pursue the fleeing negro; they would leave that dirty work to the Democrats. He asked whether any Southern gentleman was willing to turn out and chase a fugitive slave. He understood that in the part of Illinois called Egypt, the people catch black men, and instead of advertising them as runaways, advertise for their master.

Mr. LOGAN, (Dem.) who represents Egypt, said that any imputation that his constituents violate the law, was false. It was right that such runaways should be arrested.

Mr. FARNSWORTH explained, saying that he spoke for a large number of Republicans. Not one of them would step out of his way in pursuit of man, woman or child for the purpose of restoring them to Slavery. But in saying this, he did not say that they would pronounce themselves in resistance to the Fugitive law. They would pursue a course such as has been suggested—of "masterly inactivity." He believed the Fugitive Slave law unconstitutional and inhuman in some of its provisions, but neither himself nor his party would offer armed resistance to it.

Mr. BARKSDALE, of Mississippi, (Dem.)—The Constitution provides for the rendition of fugitive slaves and to the extent that you will not obey it to that extent you violate your oath to support the Constitution.

Mr. FARNSWORTH—You mistake: the Constitution does not provide that I should render up fugitive slaves.

Mr. BARKSDALE—It provides for the rendition, and you as a citizen of the country are bound to carry it out; and unless you do it you are a traitor. [Applause, especially in the galleries.]

The Clerk stated that having been clothed with power to enforce order, he should on the next manifestation of applause, direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to clear the galleries.

VOICES—"Do it now."

Mr. FARNSWORTH referred to an editorial in the newspaper, States and Union, of this city, in which, he said, it was stated that the election of Mr. SHERMAN would be a sufficient cause for the dissolution of the Union. This, he understood, was the Douglas organ.

Mr. ADRAIN, of New-Jersey, (Anti-Lecompton Dem.,) stated that so far as his knowledge extended it was not the organ of Mr. DOUGLAS, and did not speak for him.

Mr. FARNSWORTH—It claims to speak for Virginia.

Mr. BOWLES, of Virginia, (Amer.)—Virginia is here to speak for herself and she can act for herself.

Mr. FARNSWORTH defended the Republican Party from the charge of sectionalism. He related an anecdote of a physician who always, when called to attend a patient whose ailment he could not discover, gave him medicine to throw him into fits, for, he said, he was "hell on fits!" So it was with the Democratic Party. Every four years, just before the Presidential election, they throw the country into fits; they have lately thrown Boston and New-York into fits, and got Mr. EVERETT, Gen. CUSHING and others, to come forward and attempt to save the Union. He had no fears for a dissolution of the Union; it had been said so often that the people had got used to those threats. If the Union was to be dissolved, he hoped they would do it during the Administration of Mr. BUCHANAN, so that the disgrace would not attach to a Republican Administration. Let the Democrats elect whom they please, the Republicans will submit, and when they get into power the Democrats must submit. A Republican Administration will try to take care of the Union, and will take care of the purse.

A VOICE—"I have no doubt you will." [Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH—If we squander any more money than JAMES BUCHANAN has, God grant that we may never elect another Republican President. [Renewed laughter.] Dissolve the Union, because a majority of the people of the United States, in a constitutional and peaceful manner, elect a man President of the United States! Great God! what an idea that is. What is the intent of this Government—what the use of a Constitution?

Mr. MILES—It is to restrain majorities.

Mr. FARNSWORTH—The Constitution has never provided that minorities shall rule majorities. Dissolve this Union! What are you going to do with it? Have you never read BULWER's novel What will He Do with It? Are you going to divide the Mississippi River? If so, how much are you going to give us? Ain't you going to let our boys float their rafts down? What are you going to do with "Yankee Doodle?"—divide that too? [Excessive laughter.] What part of the Fourth of July are you going to give us, and what will you take? What are you going to do with the grave of WASHINGTON, and those of the men of the North, who fought side by side with him in the battles of the Revolution? Dissolve the Union! For God's sake, don't let us hear any more of this miserable cry about dissolving the Union. These men who fill the galleries, claquers for disunion sentiments, don't they know that if the Union is dissolved, these marble palaces will become the habitation of bats and rats, will become stone quarries, where marble will be cheap? You might as well talk about dissolving the everlasting hills as dissolve the Union of these States.

Mr. ENGLISH, of Indiana, (Dem.,) sent to the Chair the proceedings of a public meeting in Chicago, expressing sympathy with JOHN BROWN, to show that Mr. FARNSWORTH's statement of that matter is incorrect.

Mr. FARNSWORTH—I designed to say that no persons sympathized with the objects BROWN had in view.

Cries of, "Read the proceedings."

The Clerk read them.

Mr. ENGLISH remarked that such a meeting having been held in Chicago, it was eminently proper that the Republicans should select that place to hold their National Convention.

Mr. FARNSWORTH retorted that it was just as proper for the Democracy, having indorsed the sentiments of CATILINE, to select Charleston as the place for smashing the old Democratic machine into the ground.

Mr. MCCLERNAND, of Illinois, (Dem.,) said SAM WARTMAN was the founder of the Republican Party in Illinois—Sister Sapher Tomsit; and in his paper he classed JOHN BROWN with KOSCIUSKO, GARRISON and other heroes.

Mr. FARNSWORTH replied that it was true that WARTMAN had been an efficient worker in the Republican Party, but it was unfair to hold the Republican Party responsible for the sentiments of any one man, especially when we only have an extract from an editorial without the context. The South Carolina Legislature had had a resolution before it for the appropriation of $200,000 to buy arms, on the ground that Federal relations are now dissolved between the North and South. He might, with the same propriety, charge that on the Democratic Party.

Mr. LOGAN read an account of a Republican meeting held in Aurora, Illinois, sympathizing with BROWN.

Mr. WILLIAM SMITH, of Virginia, (Dem.,) claimed the floor, but yielded it, for a personal explanation, to Mr. NELSON, of Tennessee, (American,) who denounced certain statements in the States and Union newspaper as willful and malicious falsehoods. He (Nelson) had taken no notice of the matter, but rather than be taken to have shrunk from the discussion of the freedom of the Press, he should now say that he had been highly commended in the one State by Americans and Democrats, as well as Republicans, for his purpose.

Mr. GARNETT, of Georgia, (Dem.,) hoped Mr. SMITH would permit a vote to be taken on the Speaker.

Mr. SMITH consented, claiming the floor for to-morrow.

After a call of the House, a ballot was taken with the following result:

Whole number of votes	215
Necessary to a choice	107
Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, (Rep.,)	109
Mr. Millson, of Virginia, (Dem.,)	57
Mr. Gilmer, of North Carolina, (Amer.,)	19
Mr. Bocock, of Virginia, (Dem.,)	10
Scattering	23

The House then adjourned.

THE HOLIDAYS FOR LEGISLATORS AND REPORTERS—AUTHORITY OF AFFAIRS IN THE HOUSE—INFLUENCE OF THE SOUTHERN UNION MEETINGS—THE HERALD AND GEN. SCOTT.

WASHINGTON, Thursday Afternoon, Dec. 22, 1859.

Alack! for the last hopes of Christmas-dinners, to be eaten around families mahoganies! Alack! for the vanished prospect of a New-Year, to be commenced with homage to all the beauty and amiability of our feminine acquaintance! There can be no cakes and ale for us on the coming anniversary of Redemption; no blanch peppings into, and poppings out of, those scented and garlanded boudoirs wherein the delicious confections of our Empire City are in the habit of exchanging sponge-cake for compliments with all their male admirers on the birth-day of each succeeding year! We are that fast here until a Speaker is elected; and of that event and the discovery of perpetual motion, there would appear about equal prospect. Pity us, ladies, and be not irate! Believe that our thoughts will be around you on that day of annual homage, though no cant of ours, with a fourth down cipher, can be deposited on your recording salvers. Remember that this misery to us, this deprivation of due incense to yourselves is due to the Republicans—grim, truculent, and "clamorous for the spoils." The gallant Democrats remember the celebrated Mr. BIRNS, who, as recorded by CHARLES DICKENS, was one of the most "willin" creatures to be found on earth. They are like the starling described in the Sentimental Journey,—a book which of course you have never read—they twitter from morning to night: "We can't get out, we can't get out"—the quaint and grisly form of GENERAL AMNESTY GRAY being interposed between their prison-bars and the expected ten days of deliverance.

There is but little hope for the plan on the floor, and still less for the recording angels in the gallery. The lucky sickness (if not serious) of a Republican's wife, might induce the thirty-hearted man to pair off with some chivalrous Democrat. A bad day nothing to one of EBENEZER SCROOGE's last prices of twelve-night send some good Administration man stumping on his way towards home, where a pair and a large swarm of small healthy children would be in ecstacies to receive him. But for the poor gentleman up in this gallery, what hope of relief is left? Is there any one to pair off with them?

Would the telegraphers and letter writers of the Herald and Tribune, always working in concert, agree to strike a truce for a couple of weeks, with the epistolary machines holding like positions on the Charleston Mercury and New-Orleans Delta? The case with us up here reverses the proverb about purgatory, and the still "lower depth." There is hope, it would seem, for some of the wrangling spirits below us; but for us, in this superior purgatory, where the desks are made narrow for special torment, and the chairs are as hard and straight-backed as an elderly female school teacher's code of morals, there is nothing but blank despair. Home cooked roast beef is a delusive dream, and ditto plum pudding a myth!

But, seriously, the case in the House stands as follows. The total number of members who can be in attendance being 235, there are 113 Republicans, Democrats, 92, South Americans, 23, together 115, and 5 Anti-Lecompton Democrats holding the balance of power. Of the South American force, 22 are under pledge to sustain the Democratic candidate whenever their votes will elect, thus giving a force of 114—supposing that JOHN YOUNG BROWN, of Kentucky, (Dem.,) who is not yet twenty-five years of age, should take the responsibility of casting a ballot. If Brown should vote, then two Anti-Lecompton men could decide the contest in favor of the Democratic candidate; but should Brown decline, it would then require three of the Anti-Lecompton patriots.

Now these five gentlemen understand fully the strength of their position, and are unwilling to abandon it. They have made a mutual pledge to cast their voices together when things come to the push, and to do nothing without previous consultation and agreement. It was in this view that the sudden nomination of General MILLER, the day before yesterday, was premature and unsuccessful; for there is reason to believe that, had these five been consulted in a proper spirit of conciliation, their votes could have been had for him as a man standing confessedly above reproach, both in his personal and party aspect. Even as it is, there would appear probabilities that his election may yet be compassed, if the unruly Southern element can only be tamed down within any thing like decent bounds of moderation.

The Union meetings at the North, and more especially the one held at the Cooper Institute, have given great and thorough satisfaction to the Senators and Congressmen here representing the Conservative interest. The attempt of the Herald to convert that demonstration in your City into an irregular nomination for General SCOTT, has done more than all the other suspicious acts of that journal put together, to open the eyes of Southern men to its real motives and design. It was significant to-day, moreover—and has occurred on many occasions before—that the Republican leaders, whenever they get a chance, blow the horn for the Herald with a vigor and pertinacity such as no other journal can elicit. They always attempt to saddle its utterances upon the Democratic Party; and, to-day, the great GALGENA expended nearly a quarter of an hour in lauding the "spice" and "sprightliness" (Washington terms for slang and ribaldry) of its editorials.

But such men as TOOMBS, HOWELL and others have commented largely on the fact that the Herald and Tribune joined forces to make the meeting a failure, and demanded that it should be made a failure by the citizens, because called together "under the auspices of the same men who nominated WM. F. HAYNE, says." When the meeting, in spite of this joint tirade of ridicule and venomous suggestion, proved a success, then again the Tribune and Herald joined forces to prove that "Tammany Hall had nothing in the world to say to it."

But now the position taken by the Herald with regard to SCOTT is felt to be a gradual dropping of the mask, and it begins to be understood here—as it has been known to every one in political and journalistic life in your City for the past three years—that the Herald is only paving its way with SCOTT for a gradual change of front; and that it will come out in the next Presidential contest as the standard-bearer of the irrepressible conflict candidate, just as certainly as that it occupied the same position towards JOHN C. FRÉMONT. Regarded in this light, the Herald is now coming to be viewed by our Southern friends as the most dangerous incendiary Abolition paper published in the country. Under the specious pretense of wishing to place the slaveholders on their guard, it does not point out, as might be done, where the danger comes from; but quotes in full and with vociferous exultation every item and paragraph, chapter and line, editorial and letter, that can augment Southern apprehension, and arouse Northern jealousy, and in the realization of this mischievous scheme, floods the South with matter far more dangerous than any statistics of NEGRO, or rhetoric of WENDELL PHILLIPS. The trick is audacious, as becomes the Herald, but its audacity has at last challenged notice and exposure, and he cannot the game is finally up. The South has learned its lesson slowly, but now knows it thoroughly.

DAYS IN CONGRESS.

Sketches from the Reporter's Gallery.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 22, 1859.

HORACE F. CLARK had the opportunity for playing to some extent the Nimrod of the Administration yesterday morning and beheld all the advantages which his position afforded, stepping up and down the aisle on the Republican side of the House, he almost completely screened him from the Democracy the beneficial effects produced by the South Americans by Bennett's [illegible] Gen. HEMPHILL. Clark spoke forcibly, [illegible] and with high spirit, but apparently [illegible] without any prospect of [illegible] action on his bill which [illegible] Many thought, for the first half hour of his speech, that he was only denouncing and [illegible] the right, why he had not voted for BENNETT; point why, BENNETT having withdrawn, he was now called to give his vote for MILLSON, [illegible] conservative man, in the way he [illegible] with the Administration, of [illegible] protested. He said the Republicans [illegible] the whole, almost unanimously during the long [illegible] when then the Democracy of the [illegible] high up in his [illegible] and then, [illegible] made observing his [illegible] being opposed to [illegible] Gen. [illegible] gentlemen's head by his own hand. When the smoke cleared away finally, it was found that Mr. CLARK stood just where he stood before; that he stated his motive during the [illegible] contest, to keep on voting with patience and perseverance for some one of the four other gentlemen representing his views.

JOHN A. MCCLERNAND, of Illinois, then took the floor with the intention of commenting on the effort of CLARK's speech, and withdrew himself in a candidate from the attention of the 90 gentlemen who had voted for him during the day before. MCCLERNAND is a thin man, of middle height, and very peculiar appearance.—He now [illegible] balance the back of his head in [illegible] and the expression of his face [illegible] as the Knight of the Rueful Countenance. He is a prominent nose of the Roman-rainbow [illegible] the irregular dark growth of beard round the chaps and lower face, imparts a Mephistophelian [illegible] to the whole. His forehead, however, [illegible] any sickly or contemplative [illegible] high and bold, with curiosity, [illegible] that so largely developed as to be striking [illegible] even when only seen from the reporters gallery. He speaks well and without hesitation, [illegible] being temperately [illegible] and [illegible] the full attention of the House. He [illegible] to be the leader par excellence of the Illinois Democratic Congressmen; and his vote of 27 for Speaker—being made without any consultation or caucus—as a mere spontaneous act of [illegible] combustion—speaks highly for his popularity.

MCCLERNAND having withdrawn in favor of CLARK, HENRY C. BURNETT, of Kentucky, took the floor and held it during an extremely [illegible] and heated jousting of charge and counter-charge, in which BURNETT, ANDER pinted on political events, and with a much larger experience of the temper and tone prevailing in the assemblage which he addresses.

Marching up and down the Democratic aisles, and button-holing all his colleagues who appear to have no particular business, is a tall, thinnish man with a bald forehead and crown, whose benevolent and pleasant face irresistibly recalls the portraits of that celebrated English citizen, Mr. Micawber, as placed before us in the London editions of David Copperfield. He is dressed in a blue dress coat, with bright gilded buttons and velvet collar; black satin vest, black cloth pantaloons, and white shirt collars turned down over a black silk cravat. He wanders round and round, finding no rest for the sole of his foot, as if, like Micawber, he were expecting an organization of the House to "turn up" from under some of the cushions on the benches, or to peep out of some of the contributions assembled in the page of the clerk-room. He keeps his hands in his pockets perseveringly, except when stopping up to congratulate every member who has concluded and sat down. On inquiring of my next door neighbor in the gallery, it is reported that this gentleman is an old and active member of the House, REUBEN DAVIS, of Mississippi, by name and title—an entire though not very influential party man, inclining to the Secession outlook, but rather moderate in his views, and much held in regard by non-party men for his [illegible] and [illegible] in his own State; have [illegible] the greater part of his time as a patriot of the "peculiar institution."

At this juncture, BURNETT having concluded, JOHN F. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, a Republican, attempted to get the floor, as he had attempted on several occasions yesterday—to the evident disgust and consternation of his fellow Republicans, who have adopted the settled policy of silence. Mr. FARNSWORTH is a large and handsome man, with a full brownish-red beard, large but not deeply marked features, dark black hair, regular features, and large gray eyes. He seems inclined to kick out of the party traces; and STANTON of Ohio, GROW of Pennsylvania, and sometimes GIDDINGS himself, have to "sit down upon him," as upon occasions to suppress the irrepressible conflict which he evidently longs to wage against the "bogeys of JOHN BROWN." He has to be watched as one might watch an open basket of grasshoppers or crickets. He has to be pushed back every moment, or he would have crept over the sides of the Republican wicker-work long ago. FARNSWORTH at length yields to the entreaties of his party friends, and then a miscellaneous and rambling inter-colloquy springs up between J. H. CAMPBELL and E. J. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania, J. T. NIXON, of New Jersey, J. M. HARRIS, of Maryland, M. R. H. GARNETT, of Virginia, JNO. B. MASON, of New-York, and BURNETT, of Kentucky, all but the last-named gentleman proclaiming that they voted for JOHN A. GILMER in good faith and are ready to vote for him again; while BURNETT endeavors to present reasons which should induce them to vote for Gen. MILLSON. At this point Mr. MILLSON rises and begs the House to use its judgment in the coming ballot, "wholly irrespective of the fact that he has been put in nomination." Upon this, and after a call of the House to ascertain the number of absentees, so that no unfair advantage may be taken on either side, the voting proceeds again, and the Anti-Republican vote is thrown wide as a charge of scattering snipe-shot from the mouth of a Queen ANNE's blunderbuss. GILMER, MILLSON, SHERMAN, BOCOCK, JNO. G. DAVIS, and BOCOCK have all their partisans and steadily gain in force—some more, some less—but all apparently fixed in the resolve never to surrender while there is a shot in the locker. It is to be hoped that the resolution introduced yesterday by WARREN WINSLOW, of North Carolina, to the effect that after this day's voting "no further vote for Speaker should be taken until after the 5th of January" may prevail—though there would appear but a remote hope thereof.

While they are calling the names, let me note that there is a member here, JOHN J. PERRY, of Maine, (a Republican,) who bears the most striking small-sized resemblance to the colored prints of DANIEL WEBSTER. He was in Congress twice before, though, not during the last term, and makes a very steady, plodding and working member. He has nothing of that nonchalance which characterized WEBSTER's head—nothing of the individual force and will which flashed from the eyes of the Marshfield statesman; but the likeness is there," as WILLIAMS R. W. COXE might say, "and you can't help it not." It is a miniature, mental and physical—perhaps stronger in the moral traits and less general in the animal development—but a likeness, nevertheless, which none who glance at him with memory in their optic nerves can fail to perceive. He represents a district chiefly agricultural, and looks like a farmer who may have varied his employments in early life by an occasional whaling voyage.

The vote is now declared and shows that it numbers 237—95 for SHERMAN, 79 for MILLSON, and 36 for GILMER, and the rest scattering. The Republicans call, "Vote, vote!" but LAWRENCE M. KEITT, of South Carolina, has the floor, and professes himself ready to discuss any and all subjects. KEITT, dignified in a previous letter, speaks well—with a coolness which his private style and reputation would not have led one to expect. His handsome, shaven appearance skits him; and his opening would rather indicate that he is in favor of abandoning all strictly Democratic requirements in the selection of a Speaker. He states the forces to be—Republicans, 115; Conservative National men, 120, and then asks what can be the difficulty to organize under these circumstances? The falling off in SHERMAN's vote to ninety-five is an indication that the more moderate Republicans of American proclivities have finally abandoned him. He has conducted the error, also, of representing his opponents severally to different men. To LUTHER M. CARTER, for instance, he is said to have given assurance that he was as "sound a national man as any in the House;" while to the OWEN LOVEJOY anti-slavery wing he is said to have "rejoiced in the achievement of everything in HELPER's book."

The Herald's attempt to convert the Union meeting of New-York into a Scott nomination excites general comment, and has done more than anything else to convince the South that in the Herald they have one of their most active and influential enemies. First denouncing Tammany Hall for having organized the movement, and attempting to crush it on that ground, and then, when it was a success, endeavoring to prove that Tammany Hall had "nothing whatever to say in it," the Herald is now about going into another belch, but the mail closes at 3 P.M. in the House, and no more time is left. THE LOSS OF THE STEAMSHIP INDIAN.—The Montreal papers publish a series of documents relating to the loss of the steamship Indian. Her commander, Capt. Wm. Sayre, having been severely censured for his conduct at the time of the disaster, puts forth a long statement in self-justification. After detailing the circumstances of the wreck, he says:

"As soon as possible I sent the purser and the steerage passengers to Halifax in a schooner, and made arrangements by the sale of other schooners to take the remainder and cabin passengers with myself. But as we were about embarking, the Gladiator came alongside and took us all on board, except four of the steerage passengers, who remained on the schooner, the captain of the Gladiator refusing to take them on board, saying he had no room for them. They were provided for the arrival of the Gladiator, had been prepared for and would have been occupied by them.

"I can appeal in my whole past life and to the testimony of all the passengers who ever sailed with me for evidence to prove that I could not have acted in the manner that has been stated. Whatever their motives may have been, I declare solemnly that the statements made by the passengers convey an entirely false view of the whole matter, and are full of injustice to me. I did every thing I could for the safety and comfort of the passengers, and I cannot reproach myself with either alienation or neglect.

"I was only on my arrival at St. John last Tuesday that I was made acquainted with the charges that have been brought against me here, and I have lost no time in coming all ways to meet them. As my conduct, however, will certainly be subject of inquiry by the legally constituted tribunal in England, the Admiralty Court, I hasten to meet that inquiry, satisfied that an impartial judgment will do me justice and acquit me. WILLIAM SAYRE."

OUR SOUTHERN CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM LOUISIANA.

The Sugar-Cane Issue—Louisiana Conservatism—Tone of the Press—Height of the New-Orleans Season—Two Crops—Amusements.

NEW-ORLEANS, Thursday, Dec. 15, 1859.

We in this section of the Union are looking with the deepest interest upon the development of public opinion in yours, with regard to the important questions which have sprung out of recent transactions, connected with the John Brown foray. The propositions of men of conservative views, in Philadelphia, Boston and New-York, to hold meetings for the purpose of giving expression to sentiments and determinations in favor of maintaining those relations between the Northern and Southern States, which it was the object of the founders of the Union and the framers of the Constitution to secure for all time, are looked upon here with the most hopeful and yet intensely anxious eyes. Much good may result from these movements, if undertaken in the right spirit, by the right men, and with right resolutions and purposes.

The best and sincerest disposition towards the preservation of those relations, exists on the part of the people in this State, whom I have looked in vain for anything that could be construed into a demonstration of hostility to the existence of the Union. Louisiana has exhibited no marked sentiment in connection with recent events, though there can be no doubt that in the event of the vexed question of the rights of property in the territories being decided against the South, she would stand by the injured and maintain her rights or die nobly.

The record is a clear and clean record, as a Union and Constitution-loving State, and she has never given way to such steel-like sides of sectional feeling as have sometimes characterized the legislation of others. That her people feel that we have reached a crisis in the political career of our common country, is undeniable. I think, however, that there is a prevailing disposition calmly to await impending events, and to act only upon results. That the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency by a party announcing and avowing itself a purely sectional one, having only or mainly sectional principles as its basis of action, and virtually sectional objects and purposes to carry out, would be received in this State as a great declaration of war upon the best interests of the Republic, is, I think, undoubtedly true. And should a nomination, so made and so supported, succeed, I am equally confident that the voice of Louisiana would be as promptly and loudly raised, in denunciation of such a result, as would be that of any other State on this side of Mason and Dixon's line.

I shall not, as your correspondent, undertake the performance of a duty that devolves upon the conductors of the Press; the duty, namely, of urging the folly and the wickedness of counsels, the manifest and irresistible tendency of which is to keep alive the worst feelings between the North and the South, and it may be the severing of the ties that now bind them together as a nation. My object is, simply, to acquaint you with the state of feeling here on these absorbing and momentous topics.

You will have observed that the tone of the Press of this city has been, for the most part, in accordance with the sentiment I have described as prevailing in this quarter. While the Press here has been bold and outspoken in its comments upon what has been, and still is, occurring in your section of the Union—while it has not hesitated to denounce such expressions of sympathy with the traitors and the treason of the Harper's Ferry affair, as are falling from the Press, the pulpits and the platforms of the North, it does not seem inclined to the opinion that a dissolution of the Union is the necessary consequence of such madness; but it relies upon the assurances that are given by the wise, the thoughtful and the temperate men of the North, that there is a latent spirit there which has but to be appealed to in the proper manner, by the proper men, and at the proper time, to put down, and for ever, the factious machinations of self-seeking partisans.

The recommendations of a portion of the Southern Press, that, in a certain political event, non-intercourse be at once established between the South and the North; that no more Northern journals shall be allowed to cross the line; that no more Free State products shall be purchased; that no more books bearing a Northern imprint shall be read; that no more Yankee-born schoolmasters shall teach, no more Yankee-born preachers shall preach, within the limits of the Slave States, have not produced a very strong impression in this region. On the contrary, you will find them laughed at by the more ultra Southern of our Press as pseudities, not to be seriously addressed to a population so intelligently awake to its interests, its rights and duties as is our own—as transparent absurdities, by which no considerable portion of the people can possibly be led away. Such journals hold, that crude partisan recommendations it will not answer for the South to entertain, and least of all such senseless ones as are in direct conflict with those principles of government which have always been upheld and maintained by the best intellects of this section of the country.

Our city is now fuller of visitors, on business mostly, but to a very considerable extent on pleasure bent, than it has been, at this period of the season, for years. Trade commenced here briskly as early as September, and by the middle of October, as much business, in certain lines, had been transacted, as usually by the first of January. The great increase of travelling facilities, connecting us more immediately with distant points, added to the fact of our complete exemption from sickness, and from the remotest fear of a possible recurrence of epidemic fever, was no doubt the cause of this unusually early commencement of business. The first part of our season was unusually mild, nay, Summer-like,—and those who, in obedience to fashion, which ordains the wherewithal we should be clothed, had put on their Winter gear, began to find it burdensome and uncomfortable. But this did not last long. For weeks past we have been having really hyperborean weather.

When this occurs at this season of the year, you may imagine that the sugar crop comes to be an interesting topic of conversation and speculation. The opinion seems to be very general now that it will not reach 200,000 hogsheads; I have heard it stated at 160,000 as the more probable figure.

Nor is it the sugar-cane alone that suffers disastrously from these unusual frosts: the orange trees feel it, too, most sensibly. Within five or six miles of this city, there was ice, yesterday morning, so thick as to bear a man's weight, in walking in places from twenty to thirty feet long, in the swamp-lands; and the planters and horticulturists in the neighborhood apprehend the total loss of their most thrifty orange trees. The crop of this season was early gathered, the premature frosts compelling the fruit to be picked before it was fully ripe.

Of course, I need not tell you of cotton—that sensitive plant, making its movements felt in your market as well as in ours, with its every fluctuation—the truth is now, that the whole cotton crop this year will reach four millions and a quarter of bales.

We have a nice prospect before us of seeing completed in the course of a decade one of the most magnificent custom-houses in the country. When completed it will be the receptacle of so much of the national revenue as accrues to the Treasury from duties on imports, of the Sub-Treasury for this district, of the City Post-Office, and of the United States Courts—all of which, scattered over the city, are just now in the most inconvenient localities. The Collector has his rooms, even now, within the half-finished structure, and the Revenue flag, with its perpendicular stripes, floats from one corner of the scaffolding that incloses the work, as if in a cage. Last night, a pine-wood shanty erected within the walls for the accommodation of the Superintendent, took fire in some mysterious manner, and made quite a conflagration. The building proper being fire-proof, was only smoked a little, and the whole damage was restricted, thanks to the exertions of the firemen, within ten thousand dollars.

There was an operatic performance here last evening, at the new theatre, which it would have done you good to witness. It was that of MAVERSAN's "Huguenots," with the new tenor, MARIANI, the new soprano, GUASCO, the old Orleans favorite, GARRIGUE, and the new baritone, MEDMENHEIM. In the principal parts. Superbly put upon the stage, in every particular, sustained by a first-class orchestra, and listened to by an audience radiant with beauty and fashion, it was the greatest lyric success I have ever known, and my recollection goes a good way back, and includes a somewhat large experience in the principal cities of the Union, in matters of this kind. I should like to have some of your clever critics' opinions of the way we do opera here, nowadays. Cannot one or two of them be spared, in the intervals that elapse between your few and far between Academy seasons? They would be very warmly welcomed here. CHALMETTE.

FROM KENTUCKY.

National Politics—Presidential—Douglas at the South—His Position and Availability.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Tuesday, Dec. 20, 1859.

It is well remarked hereabouts that there is a quiet but strong and growing feeling in Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana and several other Southern States, in favor of the final nomination of DOUGLAS by the Charleston Convention. That body's discretion and sagacity, after a trial of the strength of others and a survey of the whole ground, will teach it to put up Senator DOUGLAS as the Democracy's forlorn hope, and as a compromise candidate for Northern and Southern Independents and Conservatives. He is not politically dead nor dying. The wish is father to the expression of those who say so. Democrats who don't like his "doctrine," are becoming convinced of his availability. The party necessity of securing the electoral vote of Pennsylvania, New-Jersey and Indiana, not to mention other Northern States, is opening their eyes to the claims of the "Little Giant," as, after all, quite likely the only man for the occasion. He must be nominated to save the Democratic Party from disunion and destruction. He will be nominated, or no Northern State can be relied on for the Charleston nominee. Without or with instructions for others, the majority of the Southern delegates will come around for the nomination of him. In order to harmony, all differences on the Slave question must be buried—the agitation must cease—all Democrats must practically acquiesce in and abide by the Finality of 1854.

Even some Southern Secessions now own that the country needs rest from Slavery agitation, so far as politics is the game, and so far as it is used for the mere purpose of political results without a practical benefit. Quite a confession to come from them! Let them do works meet for repentance! Some now professedly deprecate "Congressional protection" as extra-constitutional and inopportune; and even say they are willing the people of the Territories, like the States, whenever and however they please, shall henceforth settle the question, if not on the score of abstract or absolute right, yet as a reparation for the sake of Democratic and national peace and concord. This is well. We trust they will labor for the realization of these their professions.

But this is not, as yet, the prevailing Administration sentiment or profession in the South. We often hear Administration men say they know no practical difference between the doctrines of DOUGLAS and BUCHANAN; and looking upon the former as a traitor to his party and the South, and upon the latter as a consistent and open enemy, they cannot imagine a contingency in which they would be hesitant to choose between them. So they talk. They will have no other gods before them save those of the Hermon, Baal, Hoss, or Gyrasin model—men who will uphold Southern rights after the BUCHANAN fashion. They will disserve all connection with the North and the Northern Democracy, and inaugurate a Southern Confederacy, under the leadership of Governor Gustavus Wise and his aids, IVERSON, CLAY and DAVIS, rather than submit to the rule of the "irrepressible" SEWARD or the Anti-Lecompton BUCHANAN!

Such counsel will commend itself to nothing of consequence. This Union will not quake and fall to pieces under the tread of any one man, be he even President. Neither his election nor his administration, of that by most, will cause dissolution. It would even survive the impossibility will attend to the accession of such a man to power—indeed the throne, for neighbor than the throne itself.

Reckon GUSTAVUS or DOUGLAS will be the Charleston nominee? Between chances still appear the best. According to the more prevailing opinion, only he can come the country from "Black Republicanism." Give us "Squatter Sovereignty" before "John Brownism!" The Democracy generally would, at least, rally under his banner. As the nominee, under an without instructions, every Southern State, and at least half a dozen Northern States, would go for him in November. So they say. What the New-York TIMES says of the Democracy of the "Empire State," will probably hold true further South. "Experience shows that the Democracy has wonderful capacity for forgiveness when any special end is to be accomplished thereby.

The position of JOHN FORSYTH, of Alabama, will tell among his rampant friends and neighbors. He urges it upon them that DOUGLAS has breasted the storms of sectionalism everywhere, that he alone has a particle of strength in the North, and that the honor and the welfare of the Democracy and of the South demand the immediate recognition of his claims. The Democratic South are bound to coöperate with their Northern brethren for his election in 1860. They are bound by the compact of Non-Intervention, and cannot depart from it without disgracing themselves. DOUGLAS is the author and embodiment of Non-Intervention, and he alone can and will carry it out.

One thing is certain: Southern Conservatives of all parties are sick and tired of this Slavery talk; and they are inclining to believe that Federal non-intervention will do away with this benefit sectional party agitation. They want no more Buchanan-lism and behind the high seats of Federal power; no more Federal sectionalism about Slavery. So far as this matter is concerned, I apprehend they care not who shall be next President, if he will only prove himself practically and thoroughly a non-interventionist and non-agitator.

Another thing is certain, as our Douglas men are free to proclaim. The Democratic Party, from Maine and Florida to Oregon and California, is more than ever bound by its solemn pledges, and by the necessities of its own existence, to reject all ultraism, and to march under the flag and keep step to the music of Popular Sovereignty and Popular Sovereignty men.

PONTIAC.

FROM TENNESSEE.

Memphis and Her Brilliant Prospects—"Cotton is King"—Exhorbitant Wages—The Three Great Iron Arteries—The Memphis and Charleston Railroad, and the Air Line from New-York to New-Orleans—Politics and the "Institution"—Gen. Foote and the "Least" President—Assessments—Miss Davenport, &c., &c.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Friday, Dec. 16, 1859.

Memphis is undoubtedly on the eve of a very rapid development into a great and powerful city. The rapidly increasing river trade, and the numerous avenues opened by railroad communication, have given an almost unparalleled impetus to improvements, even at a season when depression of a serious nature has paralyzed other Western and Southern cities. I was last evening in conversation with a very prominent and intelligent citizen of the capital city of a neighboring State, who declared it his firm belief that in fifteen years Memphis would equal St. Louis in population and trade. This I know, that with a present population of only 25,000, there have been built, during the past year, fifteen hundred houses, every one having its prolonged tenant. Even at this the dullest season of the year, the three large hotels, Gayoso, Worsham and Commercial, are actually unable to accommodate the travel. Another large hotel, "The Overton," is being rapidly hurried on to relieve the excess.

But "Cotton is King" in Memphis. King, did I say? Nay, Autocrat were a better title, for everything gives way to Cotton, who levies contributions upon every energy of the city—and amply does the city return the compliment. Four hundred thousand bales to be brought in, principally by rail, twice drayed to the storehouses, yards, or bluffs, and to the levee, passed through brokers' hands and shipped away by the packets at an average expense of $5 per bale, sum up for this item alone the very comfortable sum of $2,000,000. It will be admitted that I have rather under than over-stated the expenses, when I assure you that, at the moment I write, fifty cents per bale for a single drayage is demanded by some, and thirty to forty paid by many; and that rollers on the levee receive $1 per hour!

I find here one of the three great rival arteries of trade and travel which cross from the Atlantic to the Mississippi Valley. I allude to the St. Louis, Alton, Terre Haute, &c., via the Lake Shore and Buffalo Railroad to New-York, Boston, &c. The Ohio and Mississippi, via Louisville or Cincinnati, Wheeling, Baltimore, or Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, &c., and this—the Memphis and Charleston—over which, within a few days after this shall reach you, when the nearly completed connections of the Mississippi Central, and the Orange and Alexandria roads are finished, passengers and freight will be conveyed from New-York to New-Orleans, and vice versa, in the almost balloon-time of THREE DAYS AND TEN HOURS! Of course, when this shall be achieved, the public will demand that the Great Southern Mail shall pass by this road.

I have passed over this M. and C. Railroad several times, and have taken some notes of its operations. In its course of 257 miles, it runs through three States, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi, and is one of the best conditioned, best conducted, and most successful in the South or West. The road has been in operation nine years, without a serious accident, and what is more wonderful—and can be claimed of but few roads, if any, of equal extent in the Union, with an aggregate passenger business so large—without killing a single passenger! The net receipts of the road the last fiscal year amounted to $578,036, equal to over 12½ per cent on the entire cost of road and equipment; and the net running receipts of November were $110,000, equal to $1,320,000 per annum. As an evidence of the superior energy and admirable system employed in the engineering department, I may state that in July last, although 1,800 feet of the bridge over the Tennessee River at Decatur was carried away by a tornado, so quickly was it repaired that but a single Eastern connection and three Western ones were lost! The stock consists of 20,500 shares at $50 each, held by 1,300 subscribers, (omitting Charleston, with its 10,000 shares.) This gives an average of 57 shares to each subscriber. The President is SAMUEL TATE, Esq., who holds $30,000 worth of the stock, and is the second largest stockholder.

There is little excitement in the political world in this section at present, the rank and file here, as elsewhere, evidently awaiting the pilastions from Washington, the great heart of the country. As to the "institution," the end of the Harper's Ferry affair, and especially the great Union demonstrations of Philadelphia, Boston, and elsewhere in the North, have poured the most mollifying oil upon the troubled waters, until there is but one voice of hope and confidence wherever I have joined in conversation on the subject. The most alarming intimation I have yet heard, was given by Gov. FOOTE, of Mississippi, in my hearing to-day, that although he had been laboring arduously in the Union cause, it was his firm opinion we had elected our last President of the United States. Having given my authority, you can place what estimate on the prediction you please.

Memphis is pretty well supplied with amusements at present. That general favorite and first of artists, Miss J. M. DAVENPORT, is performing a fine engagement at the New Theatre, where the chief citizens gave her a grand complimentary benefit last evening. Her new play of "The Mesalliance" has been the rage here. I learn she has been invited by the citizens of Huntsville, where Sam's negro theatrical company at present, to give a course of Shakspearian Readings, and has accepted. The Buckley Minstrels are performing at Odd Fellows' Hall to large audiences. Yours, truly, A. MOM.

THE MISSING ENGLISH MAIL OF THE "INDIAN."—The missing mail from Liverpool to Toronto, per steamer Indian, is no doubt lost in the wreck of that vessel. The Post-office Department have diligently prosecuted the necessary inquiries respecting it, and the only conclusion arrived at is that it was never recovered from the wreck. From a letter addressed by Mr. SMITH, the Captain of the ill-fated vessel, to Messrs. ALLAN & Co., it appears that the deck was cut through over the mail-room, and most of the mails taken out—that for Toronto most unfortunately have been left behind, while those for Quebec, Montreal, Kingston and Hamilton were recovered.—Toronto Colonist, Dec. 20.

FROM KANSAS.

Political Matters in Kansas—Municipal in Lawrence—"Real Indian" Entertainment—Real or Indian Outrages—Arrival of Injured Parties.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LEAVENWORTH, K. T., Saturday, Dec. 17, 1859.

Our town has resumed the "even tenor of its way," after the excitement of the recent election for State officers. The result of the election is not fully known, as the returns have come in unusually slow. Up to the present time there is a majority of two thousand and ninety-six for CHARLES ROBINSON, the Republican candidate for Governor. M. C. CONWAY's majority is not so large.

The returns from the twenty counties heard from, show an increase of two hundred on the number of Republican votes cast at the Territorial election last month, at which M. J. PARRISH, Republican, was returned delegate to Congress. A very large majority of Republicans have been elected to both branches of the Legislature. All are confident that our admission into the Union will be consummated during the present Congress.

The discussion that followed the introduction of the resolution in Congress, in reference to HELPER's Impending Crisis of the South, is a frequent topic of conversation. All agree that it is worth thousands of dollars to the pioneers, besides being a great amount of good to the Anti-Slavery cause. In this region the book was circulated in the late memorably hot canvass—scarcely heard of. At the present time the universal inquiry is, "Where can I find a copy of the Impending Crisis?" The news of the expulsion of JOHN BROWN's friends in the Territories, and of the outrages at Kansas, tend, by the contrary, to an enthusiasm never before witnessed in the result. Meetings for the complete organization of the Anti-Slavery decisive throughout the Territory were held on the days appointed for Sunday and Christ's anniversary.

Lawrence is characterized by the Anti-Slaverites and lots of music of its citizens. The great amount of music talent in Lawrence, strikes the new-comer as almost unprecedented in any community of its size either in New-York or Massachusetts. As a natural consequence, copeaux, glee-claim, &c., are the order of the day. Besides the "native" singers, we have the "Turner band,"—a company of well-drilled musicians and vocalists. The "Turners" have just completed a commodious building of black walnut, where they will practice the various gymnastic feats which they have been educated to regard as necessary to a good physical organization.

AN ENTERTAINMENT BY INDIANS.

A change of programme is announced for next week, by a company of Pottowatomie Indians, under the direction of "WAHOOSEE, the great chief, with his chosen braves, women and children." I trust they will find it more profitable than their fellow "red skins," the Kiowas, who have recently committed depredations on not a few returning miners and hunters and mail-carriers. Our border men wonder at the apathy shown on the part of the War Department. Had the authorities acted with but a shadow of the promptness that it displayed in the case of Old Brown, these belligerent Indians, who would not have been sent to this happy hunting ground, would now be smoking the pipe of peace in their lodges.

I think they would use the language that a Cheyenne did recently when I asked him how he liked Gen. HARNEY. His reply was: "Ugh! Big man—no like. Ugh! Big gun—bang—kill heap squaw—kill papoose—no like—ugh!" They are morbidly afraid of Gen. HARNEY, and swear eternal friendship to "Uncle Sam." In travelling through their nation we were informed that the Sioux wished the Cheyennes to unite with them and give the soldiers another fight.

The truth of the report, I, of course, cannot vouch for. In all probability no hostility will be manifested by either tribe.

An acquaintance assures me that he has known of the corpses of a man and woman being found on the Santa Fé route, near the "crossings." He also states that he saw the ashes of several wagons that had been burnt while corralled. A man named PRATT, a civil engineer, of Burlingame, was recently brought home a corpse—the victim of Indians. He was found about fifty miles beyond Cow Creek, with a ball through his heart. His dog was also near him—shot through his head.

It is possible that the miserable Kaw Indians are his murderers, but in all probability it is the work of the Kiowas. Last June I was at the house of an estimable gentleman, Mr. BEACH, a resident of Cow Creek. At that time, before hostilities had assumed so serious a form, I found Mr. BEACH endeavoring to make a treaty with the Indians, permitting him to stay there. Mr. BEACH desired to remain to pursue his business, "ranching," and packing buffalo meat for the Eastern market, and had always treated the Indians with due courtesy, feeding them, &c., but never giving them liquor. It was surmised that his refusal to give or sell them "fire water" was the real cause for their threats. It is rumored that Mr. BEACH has sent a messenger, requesting the interference of troops. Although he, with his amiable wife and daughter, have been considerably annoyed by the Kiowas, yet "their lines have fallen in pleasant places" compared with some others. Following is the statement of SAMUEL LOUX, of Peru, who came in company with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. JOHNSON and infant, from Colorado City, Pike's Peak, to this city. They had traveled with no interruption till when near Pawnee Fork, (about 270 miles from Lawrence,) when the Kiowa Indians, numbering several thousands, surrounded them and took away all their ammunition and firearms, all their clothing except that which they wore, and finally, after keeping them in suspense as to their fate for several hours, took their provisions and everything they possessed, except the cattle, wagon and one cow. They had taken the cow at one time, but owing to the appeal of an Arapahoe Indian, who befriended the terror-stricken mother and infant, it was returned to them. One of the Indians demanded Mr. LOUX's hat; it was refused to him, when the red-skin drew a revolver and shot through the cap while on the owner's head. The party pursued their journey, and fortunately met a train containing provisions, from which they were supplied.

ALEX. MEARS informs me that he left Denver City with a party of four men, and had pursued their journey homeward to near Bent's Old Fort, when several thousand Arrapahoe and Cheyenne Indians tried to talk with them. Failing to make themselves understood, they crowded in front of the team and stopped it. The writer succeeded in driving on again, but met with frequent delays. After traveling several hours under these difficulties, naturally in a state of mind of intense excitement, they met a Mexican, who spoke the Indian language. The Mexican informed the little company that the Indians whom they supposed were evincing signs of hostility, were their real friends, and, failing to make themselves understood, had resorted to the means described, to have them return, fully believing that the Kiowas would annihilate them. The Mexican confirmed the reports of the hostility of the Kiowas, when Mr. MEARS and friends concluded to return to the fort and wait for reinforcements. After remaining there a short time, they received an additional force of about thirty men, with six wagons; they then resumed their journey without molestation, except the rude protestations of the friendly Indians, until near Pawnee Fork, (about 100 miles east of the crossing "of the Arkansas River,) where the guard during the night heard the Indians in the immediate neighborhood. The camp was alarmed, and prepared for an attack. The Indians, seeing they were discovered, made the night hideous with their yells, and left towards daybreak. At sunrise they returned, with almost countless numbers, and, after several unsuccessful attempts to gain admittance within the corral, (a kind of fort made of the wagons,) they left. They were apparently mad with rage, their yells being heard for miles. They were fully aware that the whites were well armed, and would sell their lives as dearly as possible.

The Indians must have numbered several hundred to one white man. Their escape was finally effected by their yoking the cattle and driving the teams in two lines, side by side, making an opening between. The space between the wagons was occupied by horsemen, while the footmen, with cocked rifles, marched outside. In this way the cowardly Indians, who returned and followed them several miles, were kept at bay. A United States fort is being built at Pawnee Fork, and a company of soldiers are now stationed there. We were also informed that six soldiers accompany each United States mail through the Indian country. I have yet to see the first Western man who does not laugh at such insignificance on the part of the United States Government.

Unless a force of soldiers sufficiently large to completely subdue the red-skins, it makes a mad matter worse, as they are led to believe they are smarter and better fighters than the troops. The United States troops are too frequently "chumey, cowardly fellows, whom the Indians push off their horses."

A company of Rangers, consisting of about 300 of "JIM LANE's boys," would bring the Kiowas "to terms" quicker and more effectually than all the United States soldiers that they could send here. A company of 300 Kansas men could at once be formed and sent into the field, if they were provided with the necessary equipments. It has frequently been stated that the Kiowas assert that the United States soldiers killed some of their men—one of them a Chief—and that they are now having revenge. I do not know whether the popular opinion be true or not, that the soldiers were much to blame, and, like the Satanic majesty, "get us into trouble, but do not help us out."

At all events, unless something be done immediately, many lives and much property will be lost between this time and Spring. The immense emigration that will go over the Arkansas route to Pike's Peak next Spring, will be sufficient to subdue any tribe of Indians. The Santa Fé and Arkansas route being the nearest to the parallel of latitude of the Kansas Valley and Pike's Peak, (both being in the same parallel,) it will be the favorite route, especially as the South Park and Blue River mines are in the immediate vicinity of Pike's Peak. The Indian difficulties will therefore, be considered no obstacle next season, but until that time the lives of our friends should be protected—either by United States soldiers or by private mobile parties. POLITICAL.

POLITICS AT THE WEST.

The War of the Administration upon Mr. Douglas—Its Defeat—Opposition to the Charleston Convention.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

TOLEDO, Tuesday, Dec. 20, 1859.

The political cauldron is now boiling and seething in the Northwest. In this State, as you are undoubtedly aware, the last Democratic State Convention left it to the respective Congressional Districts to elect their representatives to the Charleston Convention for themselves. This is a practical application perhaps of Popular Sovereignty, for heretofore they have elected their delegates by a State Convention called at Columbus for that purpose. The Administration has felt, it would seem, that of all other places the Northwest was the place where the Douglas movement should be met and crushed out. There has been no attempt, or a very poor one, to keep this concealed. The editor and proprietor of the Cleveland Plaindealer was removed from his position as Postmaster at this place on account of his Popular Sovereignty proclivities. The present incumbent was appointed, it is said, on the condition that he would, in consideration with the United States District Attorney for this district, start and keep afloat a newspaper to oppose DOUGLAS and the Plaindealer. This paper, entitled the Northwest Democrat, has been started since the appointment of Mr. [illegible], the present Postmaster. A Newspaper war is now going on between this paper on the one side and the Plaindealer and the Administration on the other, with rather a damaging effect on the Administration and its prospects.

The President and his Attorney General, in their effort to put down "DOUGLAS and his men" in the north District of Ohio, have constituted Marshal JOHNSON the commander-in-chief of the Government forces. He is an active and energetic captain, but certainly not a good manager, as recent events show. It is said he assured the President that Ohio should be all right as against the "little rebel." He appointed Deputy Marshals in each county to constitute a trained band, who, in connection with Postmasters, were to attend to their respective localities, and act in their assumed instructions. On this account the Administration hoped and the Douglasites feared a part of the delegation of this State would be against DOUGLAS, but the Delegates are elected and the Administration utterly defeated. Wherever in the Conventions a resolution was offered indorsing the Administration, it was either voted down, or all after the word "resolved" stricken out, and a resolution in favor of DOUGLAS and Popular Sovereignty, as he expounds it, inserted. There was perhaps one district in which BUCHANAN was indorsed, but that was in rather a lukewarm manner. After Marshal JOHNSON's assurances to the President that Ohio should be all right, of course he made a great effort to carry his own county at least, and especially his own ward in the City of Cleveland; but the county went up the Cuyahoga in spite of the Marshal and the officials under his banner. The county sends to its conventions one hundred and fifty delegates, yet in the whole of this county but two Administration men were elected, and three of these got themselves elected on the Douglas ticket, by representing themselves to be Douglasmen. To carry his own ward the Marshal made a desperate effort, and had the primary meeting crowded with Government officials. The first move was a trial to make the Marshal chairman of the meeting, but he was overwhelmed in defeat; the next was to elect him a delegate to the county convention, but in this he was again badly beaten. Here he was at the end of his string. The last hand for the Administration was played out.

The Douglas feeling in the Northwest is very strong, not in it confined to Democrats, but many Republicans say if he is nominated they will vote for him. This feeling among Republicans is probably confined to the more conservative portion, often denominated Old Line Whigs, and such as were formerly Democrats and left the party during the last four or five years, and would come back to vote for DOUGLAS. This latter is a pretty numerous class; sufficient, I think, to make a certainty of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. A great many Old Line Whigs have here, whether in other places or not, become disgusted with the sympathy exhibited with JOHN BROWN's invasion. The main body of the Republican Party here on the Western Reserve, believing that BROWN went to Harper's Ferry to incite a servile insurrection and wield their arms against the National Government, openly and in public meetings justify his undertaking. This, of course, disgusts conservative men, to whatever party they belong. No one of the Western Reserve would imagine to what length the Anti-Slavery sentiment goes, and how it runs into treasonable feelings towards the Federal Government.

If by any means DOUGLAS should not be nominated at Charleston, how will the Convention satisfy the Democracy of the Northwest? It is very evident this region is looking up for honors, and does not only ask them, but claims them. The only way the Convention could arrange the matter with the Northwest would be, if a Southern man is nominated for President, to give it the Vice Presidency. This would be the next best thing! If this should be done, who should be the candidate. PAYNE, of Ohio, stands above all the rest. He is a fit representative of Popular Sovereignty, and two years ago, as candidate for Governor, ran better than any candidate on the Democratic ticket for that office for the last six years. But it would still be a very dangerous experiment to give the Vice-Presidency to the Northwest and throw DOUGLAS overboard. DOUGLAS is the cry all over. Popular Sovereignty is a living, breathing thing with this people, and it and its champion are with them, in all probability, a sine qua non, and the only salvation for the Democracy. OCULUS.

Political Position of Mr. Stephens, of Georgia—The Presidency.

From the Atlanta (Ga.) Confederacy.

A report has been industriously circulated at the South that Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS was not only a sympathizer, but an indorser of the Free-soil territorial heresies of Judge DOUGLAS. We emphatically state, and we speak by authority, that the report is false. Mr. Stephens differed with Judge Douglas upon his views and dogmas of Territorial Sovereignty, as wide as the poles. There is not even an assimilation of affinity upon that question between them.

Judge DOUGLAS believes that a Territorial Legislature has the right to legislate unfriendly to the protection of Slavery. Mr. STEPHENS denies the existence of any such authority, upon the grounds that there is no sovereignty in the people of a Territory until they have formed a constitution in accordance with the requirements of the Federal Constitution and been admitted into the Union. Then, and not till then, in his opinion, does sovereignty exist with any people. Judge DOUGLAS and his followers deny the constitutional right for the protection of Slavery in the Territories. Mr. STEPHENS, on the other hand, contended for this right ten years ago, pending the discussion of the compromise measures. He endeavored to engraft this principle of Territorial protection in the bill organizing the Territories of Utah and New-Mexico, but was only sustained by about seven representatives from the

LITERATURE AND ART ITEMS.

The Journal de Saint-Leu, of Mauritius, of the 20th ult., says: "M. de Lamartine left yesterday for Paris. He carries with him some forward for his estate, and the national subscription, only produced about 10,000 francs, so he was obliged to ask for time. He called all his creditors (more than 300) together at the Chateau of the Pamplemousses, and, after a sympathetic form his estate, the value of which exceeded his liabilities. He also stated that, notwithstanding his disinterestedness of the national subscription, he had paid to his creditors, in eighteen months, out of the produce of his literary labors, a sum of 120,000 francs, and engaged to pay in January and February next, a further sum of 200,000 francs; so that his debts would be reduced to 1,000,000 francs. He, therefore, solicited the indulgence of dividing his payments into three or four instalments—hoping, he said, by labor and economy, to pay every one. A full, however inconvenient, it might be for several years, was given to the creditors to have their debts settled by these small payments, yet not one of them opposed the proposition."

The Shakespeare birth-place Committee has brought a suit to test the validity of the will of Mr. John Shakespeare, by which he left £2,500 to be devoted to establishing a museum of the house where his distinguished ancestor was born. He further charged his estate, known as Langley Priory, near Stoke-upon-Trent, with a rent-charge of £20 per annum, to be paid half-yearly to the person who should be appointed to relinquish the office as keeper, with directions to keep a visitors' book to present with a copy of his will to any visitor who may be desirous of [illegible] a sonnet or verse in honor of the poet. It was alleged by these bequests that [illegible] within the mischief of the [illegible] further, that the words in the [illegible] a "museum, or for other purposes," were too wide and general, and therefore that the bequest was void for uncertainty. It was also contended that the bequest of the rent-charge created a perpetuity in contravention of the act relating to perpetuities. The judge reserved his decision.

The Life of Havelock, by Mr. J. C. Marshman—the Autobiography of Mrs. Piozzi, with a Collection of Her Letters—the Travels of Mr. John Bull, President of the Alpine Club, in Unfrequented Nooks and Corners of Mountain Country—A Year in Scotland, by Mr. C. R. Weld—and Seven Years' Residence in the Great Deserts of North America, by the Abbé Domenech, are some of the more interesting works in preparation by the Messrs. Longman.

The Court Circular, London, says that it is reported that a noble lord, the eldest son of a popular peer, has written an exquisite original poem of such surpassing beauty as to perfectly enchant all who have read it. It is at present in MS., but it will soon be submitted to the ordeal of the public through the medium of Mr. Murray, the well-known publisher. "Orestes" is the name of the noble lord's poem.

The Russian naval department has taken up that wonderful invention of Mr. Piazza Smyth, for making astronomical observations on board a rolling ship, and the Pulkaye astronomers and mechanicians are now engaged in manufacturing a large free-revolving apparatus for observing altitudes of stars at night without the aid of the sea horizon.

A new commentary on Junius is announced from the pen of Mr. Josiah Parkes, father of the well-known Miss Bessie Parkes, the zealous advocate of the rights and wants of women. The work is stated to contain many new facts and documents in favor of the claim of Sir Philip Francis to the authorship of the Letters.

Sivori, "the only one," says Galignani, "of Paganini's alunni who at all recalls the magic of the great master's bow," is about to give three concerts of chamber (i. e. classic) music in Paris. Besides Sivori, the instrumentalists will consist of Rémy, Alexandre, Castagne, Chevillard and Jacquard. The vocalist is intrusted to Mme. Lafontaine.

An event rare in theatrical annals occurred a few days ago at Berlin. M. Ischiocche, of the opera of that city, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his début. He is a bass singer, and has still a fine voice. The Prince Regent made him a pecuniary present. His fellow-performers presented him with a testimonial, and the bands of the two regiments of the guard played before his house.

Walt Whitman, the author of Leaves of Grass, who shot up so suddenly into the literary heavens three years ago, and sent "his barbaric yawp over the roofs of the world," seems to be once more rousing himself to speech, and "shoots his voice high and clear over the waves" in the Saturday Press of to-day with a new and characteristic poem entitled "A Child's Reminiscence."

On the occasion of the festival in honor of the poet Schiller, the Emperor of Austria decided that henceforth the tenth part of the receipts of the theatres shall be devoted for the benefit of the dramatic poets of Austria still living, and who have composed pieces which belong to the repertory of the various theatrical establishments.

A bill is pending in the Tennessee Legislature to provide for obtaining books, maps, charts and documents relating to trade, commerce and finance from other States and nations, and for the payment of contingent expenses. The library is now comparatively insignificant.

Mr. Carlyle has sent one of the new volumes of his Life of Frederick the Great to press; another will shortly follow, and both will be published early in the coming Spring. These two volumes will bring the history of his hero down to the end of the Seven Years' War.

It is reported that M. Empis, the ex-manager of the Théâtre Français, has been appointed Inspector General of public libraries. The post, which was originally created for M. Rouseau, as a consolation for the loss of the direction of the Beaux Arts, has not hitherto been filled up since his death.

A Provincial journal publishes a copy of verses of twenty-two lines, which it declares the Duke de Malakoff wrote, on the occasion of his late visit to Durante, the residence of the Duchess d'Isly. They are not worse than the usual run of amateur versifications.

Mr. Massey has in the press the third volume of his History of England during the Reign of George III. This work has been so long delayed on account of Mr. Massey's public duties as Under Home Secretary. He promises, however, now to finish it forthwith.

It is now stated that the Cornhill Magazine is to have three serial stories running at once; one by Mr. A. Trollope, one by Mr. Thackeray himself, and one by a lady, name unknown. It is to consist of eight sheets, or 128 pages, with two illustrations.

A collection of David Roberts' Spanish sketches—the work of his best time—is just now open at the German Gallery, in Bond-street, London. The slight, sketchy, clay-colored pictures he is now producing are said to be the work of either a hasty or a failing hand.

Mr. Tennyson is to receive £150 for a single idyl of about one hundred lines from the Messrs. Macmillan, for the January number of their new magazine. Bradbury & Evans paid him £100 for the "Grandmother's Apology," published in Once a Week.

The Kreuz-Zeitung states that the marriage at Munich of Ivan Golovin, the well-known literary refugee, was telegraphed to the Emperor of Russia, and his Majesty immediately replied, "My imperial paternal blessing. All is forgiven, all is forgotten."

The French papers publish on behalf of M. de Lamartine a contradiction of the report, which, it seems, has been circulated, that he proposes to deliver public lectures. He had arrived in Paris, from Macon, and is working at his serial, the Entretiens Littéraires.

There is a portrait, by Jarvis, of the Hon. J. C. Calhoun, among those of the Secretaries of War, in the Library of the Military Academy at West Point. It has been generally believed that that distinguished statesman never sat to any artist but Peale.

Sir Emerson Tennent's Ceylon is out of print. The whole of the first edition has been sold within three weeks of publication; this is an extraordinary success for a work published at so high a price—£2 10s.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Frederick Douglass has made his appearance in Halifax, Eng. At a public meeting of the Halifax Branch of the Mutual Provident Alliance presided over by J. Stansfeld, Esq., M. P., he was called upon, and delivered an extempore address. After alluding to his early life and his purchase by friends in England, he said now he was a runaway again. He rejoiced that in his running away he had such a people to run amongst, and such a country to run to. It was the home of the oppressed of all nations—the asylum of all who suffered from despotism in any form. This was the boast, the pride, the glory of England.

Dr. Franz Liszt, the pianist, has written a letter to Mr. C. Jerome Hopkins, of this City, testifying his approbation of his late efforts for the advancement of native art. The letter concludes as follows: "Permit me, then, Sir, to express my thanks for, and add my heartfelt sympathy with, all that you have accomplished and are destined to accomplish in an honorable and courageous career, worthy of the spirit of a true artist."

A letter has just been received in Glasgow from General Garibaldi, of which the following is a translation: "I charge you to present to the generous sons of Scotland, in the name of Italy, the most warm sense of gratitude for their chivalrous demonstrations of sympathy to the cause of our country. I pray you to assure them that if an opinion [illegible] has been offered me by the cause of Victor Emanuel, I have thought better [illegible]."

The Providence Journal, speaking by authority, denies the report that Gov. Turner, of Rhode Island, intends to withdraw from public life at the expiration of his present term. If nominated by the State Convention, which meets in January, he will consent to be again a candidate for the office which he now so acceptably fills.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Patrick Boies, of Westfield, a prominent lawyer and politician of Hampden County, died on Monday, Dec. 19, at the age of 72. He had represented Granville in the lower branch of the Legislature, and in 1832 was one of the Governor's Council. While a resident of Westfield he served for two years in the State Senate, was a County Commissioner, and was appointed High Sheriff in 1843 by Gov. Clifford, and held the place until 1855.

The death of M. Poinsot, Senator, member of the Institute, and one of the most eminent mathematicians in Europe, is announced in his 82d year. He was a pupil of the Polytechnic School at its formation, and soon became one of its most distinguished professors. In 1813 he was made member of the Academy of Science in the room of Comte de Lagrange.

Gen. W. A. Owens, of Barnwell, S. C., Solicitor of the Southern Circuit, is dead. The Charleston Mercury says: "From a wild and mischievous country boy, of Prince William's Parish, with small means, and unlearned, he became a good citizen, a prominent lawyer, a member of the Legislature, Solicitor of the Southern Circuit, and candidate for Congress at the time of his death."

Mr. John Finchman, for many years master-shipwright of the Portsmouth (Eng.) Dockyard, builder of the ship Arrogant, and author of numerous works on naval architecture, died recently at his residence, Highland Lodge, near Portsmouth.

Lieut.-Col. Robert D. Campbell, C. B., of the Seventy-first (Highland) Regiment of Foot, died recently, in his 43d year. This gallant officer served with the Seventy-first at the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and was, for his services, made a Companion of the Order of the Bath.

In some of the Austrian papers it is said that Baron Brenner, who is now Austrian Minister at Athens, will be sent to Turin, but men in office say that Lieutenant-General Count Paar, is likely to go there again.

The Empress Dowager of Russia having expressed a desire to see Garibaldi during his late visit at Nice, the General at once repaired to the Imperial residence and had a lengthened interview with her Majesty.

Intelligence from Paris states that Mr. Cobden continues indisposed, but not dangerously so. His physicians, however, still require him to remain in an even temperature and avoid all exposure.

It is rumored that Rev. Starr King is about to resign the pastorate of the Hollis-street Church, Boston, several exceedingly advantageous offers having been made him.

Memorials are circulating in Baltimore, petitioning the Legislature for the removal of the notorious Judge Stump.

The will of the late Lord Westmoreland has been proved in London. The personality was sworn under £100,000.

Mr. Samuel Lincoln, a member of the Rhode Island General Assembly from Providence, died at his residence on Summer-street, on Wednesday.

The Irish Delegation.

FAREWELL LETTER OF REV. MESSRS. EDGAR, DILL AND WILSON.

The New-York Observer publishes the following:

To the Members of Christian Churches in America:

BELOVED BRETHREN—Having resolved to leave your shores for our native land on the 17th inst., we bid you an affectionate farewell.

As a deputation from the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, we have advocated before you the cause of Missions to Irish Romanists; and during a period not much exceeding two months, you have answered our appeals by contributions amounting to $30,000.

For this noble expression of generous Christian sympathy, we tender you our heartfelt thanks.

We prize it greatly, not only on account of the cordiality and warmth of Christian kindness with which it was given, but of the practical approving testimony which it bears to the principles and practice of the Church of our Fathers, and to the strength of the bond of faith and love which unites Christian hearts, in the Old World and the new.

Among the many of highest name and worth who have laid us under deep obligations, we are bound in gratitude to give a distinguished place to the Rev. Dr. Krummacher and Gustav H. Bevan, Esq., not merely because Kerns chiefly on their invitation and by their advice that we visited your country, but because their time, and talents, and influence, and unceasing anxious labor, have been devoted to promote the objects of our mission, with an earnestness, wisdom and success which we have never seen equaled, and which we can neither fully estimate nor describe.

To these noble sons of old Ireland, and the influence which their name and character wield, in the great new world of their adoption, we chiefly owe the large and triumphant success which has crowned our enterprise.

Ministers of many evangelical denominations have cordially cooperated with them;—we have had the use of their pulpits with hearty welcome; we have been largely benefited by their advocacy of our cause; we have been made exceedingly happy by the hospitality of their domestic circles, as well as by many others; and while we have been profited by their Christian intercourse, and been associated by endearing ties with those they love best, we bear away with [illegible]

[illegible] of all morality or decency.

This is, in our opinion, a nest of thieves and vagrants, and should be immediately broken up—at the same time we cannot but express our conviction that certainly as much, if not more, blame should be attached to the owners of this property, who rent it out with the knowledge of its occupation for such disgraceful purposes.

GRAND JURY ROOM, New-York, Dec. 23, 1859.
WM. HABIRSHAW, Foreman.

NATH'L PRINE, Secretary.

To-day the convicted prisoners remaining unsentenced will be brought up and disposed of. This December Term of the Court has been particularly heavy, and Recorder BARNARD has had to sit to unusually late hours to get through the current business of each day.

The Crisis of 1857.

THE LAW OF ASSIGNMENTS.

James Holroyd vs. William Platt, et. al.—This was an action growing out of the panic of 1857, and was brought to set aside an assignment executed by defendant Platt. The plaintiff alleged that the assignment was void. He had been in partnership with Wm. Platt, under the firm name of Platt & Holroyd, and he alleged that the property assigned consisted of partnership property which belonged to said firm; that said firm owed many debts which ought to have priority of payment out of said property; that Platt had made preferences for some of his individual debts to the exclusion of joint debts; and the plaintiff had not authorized the assignment.

The defence was substantially that the plaintiff had no interest or right in the property assigned; that Platt & Holroyd, prior to the assignment, had dissolved by mutual consent; that Holroyd sold all his interest to one Cheesman, who subsequently with Platt, divided the property in severalty; and the portion received by Platt had thus become his individual property, and was assignable by him to individual or partnership creditors at his option.

The case was referred to Judge Brasserys, who reported in favor of the defendants, holding, 1. That Platt, having become the sole owner of all the assets, property and effects which had belonged to the late firm of Platt & Holroyd, (excepting that portion transferred to Cheesman,) had full legal right to assign the same for the benefit of his own creditors, and to give priority in payment to such creditors over the creditors of the firm of Platt & Holroyd. 2. That the assignment was not fraudulent or void, and that said plaintiff was not entitled to have the same canceled.

Now, on motion of defendant's counsel, the report was confirmed, and judgment entered accordingly.

Carpenter and Beach for plaintiff; Algernon S. Sullivan for defendants.

The City's Law Business.

EMPLOYMENT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL.

Raisson vs. The Mayor &c., of New-York.—This was an action by plaintiff as assignee of Alanson Nash, Esq., to recover for legal services rendered by the latter gentleman to the City, in the conduct of the famous Briggs examination. Mr. Nash was employed by the Committee of the Common Council having the investigation in charge; and the amount of his bill for counsel fees was $691.

On the trial below it was held that the City's law business devolved on the Corporation Counsel, and the Common Council had no authority to engage other counsel for the city.

The plaintiff appealed to the General Term of the Supreme Court. They have now rendered their decision, affirming that rendered below. They held that the act of 1849 having declared that "all the law business of the Corporation" shall be intrusted to and conducted by the "Law Department," and that the head of that Department shall be elected by the people, and not by the Common Council, the resolution of the Common Council authorizing a Committee of the Aldermen to employ counsel not so elected, without limit as to number or expense, "as in their judgment should be required," was illegal and void; and the employment by the Committee of Mr. Alanson Nash, under it, created no charge against the City, and no cause of action, unless against individual members who violated the law. The judgment against the plaintiff must, therefore, be affirmed with costs.

In case of proceedings against the head of the Law Department itself, the statute provides that they shall be conducted by the District Attorney of the County, under the direction of the Governor of the State.

The Disputed School Commissionership.

The People, ex rel. Hubbard G. Stone, vs. William Menck.—This was an action brought to oust the defendant from the office of Trustee of the Public Schools for the Twelfth Ward; and has lately been pending before the General Term of the Supreme Court, on appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

The facts of the case were that, at the election held in this City, on Dec. 1, 1857, Messrs. Hubbard G. Stone and William Menck were rival candidates for the office in question. Mr. Menck received 2,961 votes. The Canvassers gave a certificate declaring Menck to be elected. He thereupon entered upon the duties of the office, having been duly qualified. Mr. Stone claiming that he had received 2,965 votes, and was, instead of Menck, the Trustee elect, took also the oath of office, and brought the present action to establish his title and obtain possession.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Senate yesterday, having entertained a piece of territorial and judicial bills introduced by Gen. DAVIS, went into executive session, and remained so until the adjournment, as pre-arranged, until Tuesday next. The House was engaged in an animated discussion of that question previous to all others, the Slavery question. Mr. PARKSWORTH, of Illinois, having the floor, expressed his willingness to surrender it to make way for a motion, but the proposition having been declined, he embarked in the debate with unparalleled energy. He turned the responsibility for "irrepressible conflict" dogmas upon South-ern fire-eaters, citing from the Richmond Enquirer of 1857 expressions of tenor identical with those of Mr. SEWARD's Rochester speech and of HELPER's volume, only vastly stronger and decisive in their purport. From this point, the discussion assumed a catechetical turn, Mr. PARKSWORTH, in return to questions as to the readiness of Southern members to reopen the Slave-trade, receiving a volley of interrogatories in response as to his soundness upon the Fugitive Slave law, and in regard to Republican doctrines, touching servile insurrection. The Republicans were thus obliged to abandon their systematic silence, and join in a disclaimer of such heresies. Toward the close of the contest, Mr. NELSON rose to a question of privilege—certain comments of the States newspaper upon a recent speech of his in the House, affording the text and pretext. A ballot ensued. It gave, out of 212 votes, 103 to SHERMAN, 27 to MILLSON, 19 to GILMER, 10 to BOCOCK; scattering, 53. The House then adjourned.

The Democratic Senatorial caucus, after an elaborate discussion of the charges alleged by Senator BROWN, of Mississippi, against Gen. BOWMAN, has agreed to nominate the latter for Senate printer, by a vote of 29 to 5. The minority, it is stated, has declared its determination to coalesce if necessary with the Opposition to effect the defeat of the General.

The Overland mail brings advices from San Francisco to the 2d inst. The news is of slight interest. Judge TERRY, the slayer of Senator BRODERICK, had been arraigned before the Court of Sessions of San Francisco; and his counsel had made an ineffectual effort to procure the transfer to another tribunal in the same city. It was thought a mandamus would be obtained from the Supreme Court to compel the transfer. Business at San Francisco exhibited tokens of increasing animation. The arrivals from the Atlantic side had been few.

The Democrats of Oregon have held their convention for the nomination of delegates to the Charleston Convention. A minority bolted, after Senator LANE and Judge DEADY had been selected; but, without making any rival nominations, after resolving to sustain any candidate named at Charleston. The new Oregon gold region was producing a yield of extraordinary value.

The intelligence from Victoria, British Columbia, is to Nov. 23, but is unimportant.

Williamsburgh had its Union Meeting last evening, when speeches were made by Hon. AMASA J. PARKER, Mr. E. C. PERRIN, Col. T. B. THORPE and others, and a series of resolutions was adopted, all expressing confidence and respect for the Union, the Constitution, and the laws. Judge PARKER and Mr. PERRIN, the former decidedly, and the latter positively, attributed the Harper's Ferry outbreak to the "irrepressible conflict" doctrines of Mr. SEWARD. Brooklyn was not the only one of the suburbs of this city, which united in demonstrations of loyalty to the Union, last evening. At Newark there was a similar meeting, presided over by Mayor BIGELOW, and largely attended by the citizens. Our reporter states that the resolutions were at once "conservative and soundly democratic," a brace of qualities which it must be admitted are not wholly inconsistent. The speeches of the occasion were furnished by Mr. T. F. FRELINGHUYSEN, Col. J. W. WALL, Wm. H. MACDONALD, and others. At Washington, D. C., there was also an effort made for perpetuating the Union, but owing to a conviction of the majority present that the demonstration was inopportune and unnecessary, it separated with little of either union or harmony.

The Grand Jury made a brief but rather important presentment yesterday, in the Court of General Sessions. Their attention has been called, from the nature of the business presented to them, to the number of what they term minor offences committed in the City, such as burglaries, larcenies, [illegible] and the keeping of disorderly houses. The determination of Recorder BARNARD to break up this class of houses, has led to a host of indictments against their proprietors. The Grand Jury recommends that an ordinance be passed, ordering all saloons, dance houses, and places of that description, to be closed at midnight, instead of being allowed to remain open, as they are at present, nearly through the night. They are of opinion that this would lead to a substantial reduction of crime, and remove difficulties which are now thrown in the way of the Police, inasmuch as when parties have been made after parties committing depredations, the culprits escape to these places and find shelter there. The Grand Jury also drew attention to the thieving dens of the Five Points, and recommend that they be broken up. To-day the Recorder will pass sentence on various convicted prisoners, and the large case of the busiest on record—will end.

The Police Commissioners yesterday received to appoint none other than members of the old Police force to complete the number of Policemen to be added to the Department in accordance with the resolution of the Supervisors. The Board appointed twenty-five Policemen, who were selected according to this rule.

The new iron screw steamer Monticello, intended for the Washington and Alexandria line, and belonging to Messrs. H. B. CROMWELL & Co., went on a trial trip down the bay yesterday. Her performances were highly satisfactory. She returned about 4 o'clock P. M.

The Republican Convention.

The Republicans are to hold their National Convention at Chicago on the 13th of June. The Call issued by the National Committee was published yesterday morning in our columns. It differs essentially from ordinary notifications of this sort, and is much more comprehensive than a mere summons to a party Convention. Under the form of a Call, it really lays down a platform for the party thus summoned to assemble. It prescribes a political creed for all those who are asked to send delegates to the Convention. It may be well enough to present it anew for the consideration of our readers:

"The Republican [illegible] of the several States, the members of the Republican party of Pennsylvania, and of the Opposition party of New-Jersey, and all others who are willing to cooperate with them in support of the constitutions which their fathers established, and who are opposed to the policy of the present Administration; to Federal corruption and usurpation; to the extension of Slavery into the Territories; to the new and dangerous political doctrine that the Constitution, of its own force, carries Slavery into all the Territories of the United States; to the reopening of the African Slave-trade; to any inequality of rights among citizens; and who are in favor of the immediate admission of Kansas into the Union under the Constitution recently adopted by its people; of restoring the Federal Administration to a system of rigid economy, and to the principles of WASHINGTON and JEFFERSON; of maintaining inviolate the rights of the States, and defending the soil of every State and Territory from lawless invasion, and of preserving the integrity and perpetuity of the supremacy of the [illegible]

[illegible] this Government, at [illegible] are invited to send from each State [illegible] from every Congressional District, and four delegates at large to the Convention."

We consider this an eminently sound, conservative and comprehensive document;—and if it may be regarded as affording a correct and trustworthy indication of the platform and policy of the party in the approaching canvass, the Republicans may fairly challenge public faith and favor as a political organization with national aims, which they seek only through the channels of a legitimate partisan warfare. It is scarcely to be expected that, in the present temper of the public mind in that quarter, the Southern States will act with any party which opposes the extension of Slavery, or which makes issue upon any question connected with that subject. But the Republican Party is precluded, alike by its history and its constitution, from taking any other ground than that of hostility to the extension of Slavery,—and upon that point it has now, and will continue to have, as it had in 1856, the almost unanimous support of the people of the Northern States. The fact that the issue has nearly ceased to be a practical one, however it may affect the public interest in the canvass, cannot affect the position of the party in regard to it;—while the wise avoidance of specific measures by which the extension of Slavery into free territory is hereafter to be resisted, leaves ample scope for the union of all who agree upon the principle, however widely they may differ as to the practical methods by which it is to be carried into effect. Some may still adhere to the doctrine that Congress should prohibit it by positive law,—while others may be content to leave it to the sovereign action of the people themselves, or even to the judicial decision of their courts of law;—but there is no reason why they may not all act together under this Call, provided they concur in the other objects proposed to be accomplished. They are not required to enter upon any crusade against the Supreme Court, or to reaffirm their adhesion to forms of action which that Court has decided to be unconstitutional.

There is nothing in the Call, moreover, which gives countenance to the charge that the Republicans are unwilling to fulfill all the obligations of the Constitution, or that they are indifferent to the rights and the interests, the peace and the welfare, of the Southern States. On the contrary, those only are invited to send delegates to the Convention, who are "in favor of maintaining inviolate the rights of the States, and defending the soil of every State and Territory from lawless invasion." If the Republicans will give practical effect by all the means in their power to this declaration, they will afford a complete and effective answer to the charge that they look with favor or toleration upon such crusades as that of Brown, and that the power of the Government, if in their hands, would not be used, with vigor and fidelity, for their suppression. With their declared hostility to the corruptions of the Administration, the restoration of the African Slave-trade, and the schemes and purposes of the disunion party of the Southern States, the whole body of the people of the North will heartily concur.

Whether it was so intended or not, we regard this Republican Call as a substantial repudiation of many of the false and dangerous doctrines and purposes which the language of their leading organs and some of their public men has encouraged their enemies to charge upon them. It avoids all ultraisms—deals in no denunciations of classes or sections of our people, and presents no issues of principle or of policy, which can justly be regarded as hostile to the rights or the peace of the Southern States. So far as it goes, it is for the Opposition an auspicious opening of the Presidential campaign. We shall be curious to see how it may be received and followed up.

WHO MADE THE MEXICAN TREATY?—It is not very remarkable that people should see their way through a dark place when they are furnished with light; but it is curious to see how they sometimes plume themselves upon their success. The news that a treaty has been made with Mexico appears to have enabled sundry of the editorial fraternity to understand the Mexican question, in all its bearings and with all its surroundings. The following, from the Express of Thursday, is an example:

"Now this is just the sort of treaty the Express has been urging the Administration up to make with JUAREZ, for the past twelve months or more; and now that the President has taken the bull by the horns, the question is, will the Senate ratify it, and will the House of Representatives vote the necessary appropriations? * * The commercial and territorial privileges it gives us are dog cheap at $4,000,000, and as one-half that sum goes to indemnifying our own people, for alleged grievances, resulting from the anarchical condition of our neighbor, justice alike to our own citizens, and a patriotic regard for the welfare and advantage of our country at large, it seems to us, ought to make the ratification of the treaty a certainty.

"For the past twelve months and more" the Express has been at the tail of those journals whose ignorance, dippancy and abuse in treating upon the Mexican question, have excited the pity of those who really possess any true [illegible] ment of any measure for the rights of way through Mexico, and its last move from that country, received a few days since, was heralded in sensation capitals, "Mexican triumphant! Defeat of the Liberals! The Juarez Government used up!" So steadily has the Express seized upon every opportunity to make it appear that the Liberals were always defeated, and the party not worthy of the slightest confidence or support, that it was supposed to be laboring for the success of the Church, or Monarchical faction. In stating that this treaty is the work of the President, or that "the President took the bull by the horns," the Express falls into a most unhappy error, as usual. The treaty was actually made in spite of the President. This point ought to be thoroughly understood by the public, for, if the Mexican treaty is supposed to be the work of the President, Mr. McLANE's labors may be stultified. The President had nothing to do with the designing or effecting the treaty now made, because his knowledge of Mexican affairs is too limited to enable him to do anything of the kind. The treaty, as made, is of a nature never contemplated by the President, and no one is more astounded at the result of Mr. McLANE's mission than himself. The President took no bull by the horns, or, if he did, the bull threw him. When he picks himself up, he may realize his condition, and advise the Senate to save him from the chance of another such collision.

"Blowing Hot and Cold."

The Express says that, in its comments upon the late Union meeting, the TIMES "blows hot and cold." That is so:—though we presume the Express had no rational conception of the meaning of the phrase when it used it. [illegible] of the transactions [illegible] Express, which [illegible] detecting any difference between the several acts of that dramatic performance. It sees the word "Union" over the door, and that is all it knows or cares about the whole proceeding. It knows precisely how to "blow" when it gets the signal.

Our course is somewhat different. We endeavored to judge that meeting, and each part of it, as we judge everything else, on its merits. The ostensible object and purpose of the meeting had our hearty approbation. We thought it eminently proper that the citizens of New-York should thus unite, in declaring to the South that they do not indorse or approve of Brown's invasion, or of any similar attempt to invade their rights or disturb their peace. And we urged repeatedly, in advance of the meeting, the propriety of giving to this sentiment the strongest possible utterance on behalf of the great body of the people of this City. To this extent, and with reference to this end, we blew "hot,"—from the outset. And so likewise of everything in the proceedings in conformity with this purpose. We approved heartily and cordially of the general tenor of the resolutions, of some of the speeches, and especially of the admirable, manly, and equitable letter of Ex-President FILLMORE. And that approbation we have freely expressed.

But for the speech of Mr. O'CONOR, and for the evident purpose of some of the other speakers to pervert this Union meeting to purely party purposes, we have nothing but censure and condemnation. So far as they are concerned we blew "cold" most decidedly; and if the Express does not do the same thing, it is simply because its devotion to the Union is far less cordial than its hatred of Republicanism, and because it is perfectly willing to see the sentiment of this City and the North utterly misrepresented, for the purpose of indulging its party resentments. Mr. O'CONOR has a perfect right to regard Slavery as a blessing, to insist upon it as a moral, beneficent and just institution, and to censure and denounce all who differ from him on that point, if he sees fit so to do. We have no fault to find with him personally for anything that he chose to say on that occasion. But when his sentiments are put forward as the voice of the North,—when the attempt is made to convince the people of the Southern States that we, of New-York, will not interfere with their rights or disturb their peace, because we regard Slavery as a blessing, we shall not hesitate to brand the shallow trick as it deserves. The people of New-York hold no such opinions. There is not a tenth part of our population who believe, with Mr. O'CONOR, that Slavery is a beneficent, just and Christian institution; and we agree perfectly with Dr. BELLOWS, that it is a shame and an outrage to pretend, even for the sake of the Union, that such are the opinions and sentiments of the North. If they are, why did the North abolish Slavery? If New-York believes in the excellence of the institution, why does it not seek its restoration? Why has no single voice been lifted up within our boundaries for the last fifty years, for the reinstatement of a form of labor, which is thus presented as having so strong a hold upon their judgment and their benevolence? Mr. O'CONOR must know, as well as every other intelligent citizen, that the sentiments which he expressed at the Union meeting are not the sentiments of any considerable number of the inhabitants of the Northern States. He knows that any party which should avow them as the basis of its party creed, would be swept from existence the very first time the people should have a chance to deliver their verdict upon them. Any attempt, therefore, to palm them off upon the South as Northern sentiments—to conciliate Southern power and strengthen the Federal Union on such a basis,—is simply to deceive and mislead the people of the Southern States; and in the exercise of its own judgment, and in the interest of truth and common sense, THE TIMES will denounce it as a flagrant offence against justice and good faith.

The fact is, the Union must be preserved by the truth, if it is to be preserved at all. It cannot be strengthened or cemented by false pretences. The South has a perfect right to know, fully and accurately, what are the sentiments and the intentions of the North upon the subject of Slavery; and then it has to consider what it will do about it, when it does understand them. One thing may be regarded as settled at the outset,—the South must tolerate a very distinct and unequivocal disapproval of Slavery on the part of the North,—or it must go further and fare much worse. It can dissolve the Union ten times over, before it can bring the people of the North to an indorsement of Slavery as an institution which ought to be preserved and fortified. If that is the end it proposes to itself in this new crusade, it may as well stop at the outset. The North does not, and will not, hold or profess to hold any such opinion. It has given the strongest possible proof of its hostility upon excluding it, whenever it had the right to exercise any such authority.

But on the other hand, we believe the South-ern States may safely rely upon this,—that the North will not interfere with Slavery within their limits, or countenance any attempt to invade their rights or disturb their peace. The South has a right to demand this at our hands,—and so far as the Times is concerned, they will find us ready at all times to accord that demand. So far as the Union meeting pledged the people of this City to that point,—so far as it went to assure the South that we understand and will respect their rights,—it expressed the public sentiment, and uttered truly the public voice. But when it went beyond that, and attempted to pledge the North to the support of Slavery, per se, it falsified the truth of history, and took ground which none but the most subservient of party Presses can even pretend for a moment to regard as expressive of Northern sentiment, or as likely to be sustained by the Northern States.

Victor Hugo and John Brown.

Victor Hugo, of all the exiles of French Democracy the most democratic, has spoken his mind in the matter of JOHN BROWN to the whole Republic of the United States. To say this is to say that he has spoken it well, with emphasis with fervor, in that clear and vigorous prose which is the prerogative of great poets. As a piece of literary composition, this voice which comes to us from the Isle of Jersey is highly note-worthy, glittering with antithesis, rising perpetually into a quite dithyrambic grandeur of statement, and full of that effective pathos of the footlights in which the taste of our time so greatly delights, and of which the author of the Orientales and La Legende des Siècles is an unrivalled master. Of course, our Southern friends will deny even this merit of form to a series of apostrophes twenty times more insulting to their patriarchal institution than the most reckless rhapsodies of a CHEEVER, or the most biting sarcasms of a WENDELL PHILLIPS. They will probably take measures at once to retaliate on the poet as they do on the North, by a decree of non-intercourse. To possess a copy of Notre Dame de Paris will doubtless become a capital crime in South Carolina, and the luckless wight who shall be caught hanging upon the pages of Les Derniers Jours d'un Condamné in Virginia, will be instantly made to realize the situation which that work so thrillingly describes, and be set to meditating his own speedy demise in a Charlestown cell.

We at the North can afford to deal with the matter more calmly. We shall not affect any cheap and frivolous contempt for the prospective flagellation which VICTOR HUGO administers to us. The sincere convictions of a man of great genius, who has made his mark deeply in his day and generation, and who professes a sympathy, which his acts have proved, with the fundamental principles of our national institutions, are not to be lightly esteemed, nor met with vulgar scoffs. The picture which VICTOR HUGO presents to us of himself, "kneeling with tears before the great spangled banner of the New-World, and with clasped hands and profound and filial respect imploring the illustrious American Republic, sister of the French Republic, to see to the safety of the universal moral law, to save JOHN BROWN, and demolish the scaffold of the 16th of December," is not to be dismissed with a shallow sneer at its theatrical effulgence. Let us do all justice to VICTOR HUGO, that we may satisfy ourselves fairly whether VICTOR HUGO has or has not done justice to us. Fas est et ab hoste doceri, and VICTOR HUGO is by no means our enemy. He is a fanatic of liberty, and of liberty as our wildest demagogues understand it. He loves America because he hates Kings. He has just put forth, in the latest, and, in some respects, the most remarkable of his works, his conception of universal history in terms which would have made the heart of JEFFERSON tingle with delight had that enemy of all antiquities been living to enjoy them. For VICTOR HUGO all the evil of the world is summed up in the story of sovereigns. He has done his best, in vain, to brand the greatest of living Monarchs as the incarnate evil genius of the nineteenth century; and after failing to fix upon the Emperor of the French, the sobriquet of NAPOLEON the Little, he has devoted himself to proving that the son of HORTENSE is assuredly a more fruit and fearful Beast of Darkness than was dreamt of in the Apocalypse.

When he tells us then that we are committing "a crime surpassing the first fratricide in iniquity," and horrifying the world with the spectacle of "SPARTACUS slain by WASHINGTON," we have every reason to believe that the tale of JOHN BROWN's raid may truly strike in this sense the minds of foreign enthusiasts, who build their best hopes of the future of mankind upon us and our success, and who would lament our failure as their own.

What, then, are the facts on which this awful indictment against America is founded?

In part it rests upon that wild and feverish haste with which the trial of BROWN was conducted in Virginia. When we urged patience and the forms of a more grave and humane justice upon our Virginian friends, they angrily assailed us as foes of them and their honor. Here is a far-away foreigner, no foe of them and theirs, quite beyond the suspicion of a wish to be sent to Congress from a Republican district in New-York, and beyond the temptation of making money by his opinions of Virginia, who takes these proceedings at Charlestown in an infinitely more intense disgust. Ought not this to show afresh to our friends beyond Mason & Dixon's line, the extreme unwisdom of so managing their justice as to provoke such emotions in the observant mind of the civilized world? Ought it not, at least, to teach them that a desire to see JOHN BROWN mercifully dealt with did by no means argue the partisan sectionalism of those who felt it at the North?

So far, then, as this cause of his distress is concerned, we admit that VICTOR HUGO, loving America, had good reason to lament that an American State should even appear to have been driven by its fears for Slavery into a hot and hasty administration of justice. So far we cry peccavimus; the JOHN BROWN history does us here no credit; on the contrary, sore discredit. It was indeed a bad business badly managed. We accept the tears of the exile of Jersey. But does this make us criminals worse than Cain? VICTOR HUGO thinks the Union has murdered a man better than Abel, and that henceforth "the fasces of the splendid Republic will be bound together with the running noose that hung from the gibbet of JOHN BROWN;" that we "have preserved our infamy, but sacrificed our glory."

To this the answer is very simple. The Union has not murdered JOHN BROWN. VIC-

[illegible] Hugo's cant for American liberty has caused his knowledge of American institutions. The American Republic, which he thinks to be no better a sister of the French Republic, which he himself did his utmost to make impossible. In this American Republic, equal rights are as sacred as VICTOR HUGO would have personal theories to be. Ours is a liberty which grows by interaction, by the endurance of incongruities which cannot be violently removed, without tearing up the nerves and ruining the health of the whole body politic. To VICTOR HUGO, hating Slavery, nothing seems more simple than that Slavery should be assailed, turned out, beaten to death. Our crime then clearly is, that we do not think with him on this matter. Our crime is the crime of the people of France, who decline to accompany their Emperor and invoke civil war, because a number of the best of Frenchmen dislike the régime of the Tuileries, and despise its courtiers. VICTOR HUGO cannot forgive them, and he, therefore, cannot forgive us. By a singular chance, the same day, the 2d of December, represents the destiny of both nations. It will now be doubly blackened in the poet's calendar. But NAPOLEON III. reigns, and has made France mightier and happier than she had been for forty years before he reached the throne; and the cause of Freedom in America is assuredly not less advanced this day than it would have been had the Northern States invaded Virginia under the command of President BUCHANAN, Hung. Gov. WISE and Mr. HUNTER, and raised JOHN BROWN to the Presidency. VICTOR HUGO is a great poet, but he adds a fresh illumination to the old truth, that as prophets are so persistent as those whose prophecies are never fulfilled, and no teachers so strenuous as those whose lessons invariably turn to naught.

NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

From the Pacific Coast.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL—LATER FROM CALIFORNIA, OREGON, ETC.

MALLORY'S STATION, MO., Friday, Dec. 23.

The Overland mail, with San Francisco dates of Dec. 2, arrived at this station at 11½ o'clock on Tuesday night.

The following is the summary of the California news furnished by this mail:

The steamer Carlos sailed on the 29th ult. for Panama, taking one hundred and eighteen passengers. On her return she will bring up the mail which was to have left New-York Dec. 3.

Julius Tenny, indicted for killing Senator Broderick in a duel, was arraigned on the 30th, to plead in the Court of Sessions of San Francisco. His counsel moved for a transfer of the case to the Fourth District Court, also in San Francisco, which was denied. The case was postponed till the 20th, to give the defendant time to apply to the Supreme Court for a mandamus compelling the transfer.

Col. J. W. Parker, an old and much respected citizen, formerly manager of WELLS, FARGO & Co.'s banking business, died suddenly on the 29th inst., of hemorrhage of the lungs.

There were about six hundred thousand dollars in the State Treasury on the 1st.

Snow had fallen to the depth of four feet in the Sierra Nevada Mountains; "notwithstanding which," says the Placerville Observer, "we see many persons on foot and horseback, or with trains of pack-mules, pushing on to reach the Horseshoe Mines."

Over three tons of silver ore arrived at Francisco on the 29th ult.

Encouraging news from Carson Valley continues to be received. New discoveries of gold and silver, and, latterly, of lead, were frequently reported.

HENRY MESSERVE, of Nevada, recently purchased a one-fortieth share in the original Comstock silver mines, for $10,000.

The San Francisco Standard says that if the levee is not instantly repaired, that city will be inundated.

The month of November was one of almost continued storms and rains, and has given augury of an unusually wet season.

FROM OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

The steamer Pacific arrived at San Francisco on the 18th, bringing Oregon dates of the 25th ultimo.

A Democratic Convention had been held in Oregon City. Sixteen delegates from eight counties withdrew, leaving eleven counties represented. Those who remained elected Gen. LANE and Judge DEADY as delegates to the Charleston Convention, instructing them to vote for Gen. JOE LANE for President. The seceders resolved to support the nominee of the Charleston Convention, but elected no delegates.

Oregon papers contain further accounts from the new Similkameen gold mines, representing them as a reality and probably extensive. Gold has been found a hundred miles above the point where it was first discovered. As evidence of the richness of these mines, an account says that the parties discharged from service immediately fitted out at Colville and went there, and soldiers who had not worked more than three or four months exhibited $600 or $800 cash. Already several parties have started for the diggings. From the Dallas Company, about fifty organized at Portland for the same purpose, but there would be no great rush until Spring.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The steamer La Bouchere arrived on the 20th from Victoria, bringing 154 passengers and dates of the 23d ult.

On the 22d a steamer arrived at Victoria from New-Westminster, with about $100,000 in gold and 175 passengers. The passengers gave a flattering account of the Upper Fraser's River diggings, but the prospect of a severe Winter was causing the entire abandonment of that region till next Spring. Lower Fraser's River was free of ice, and the miners were disposed to stay during the Winter. About 1,500 miners remain at the Vancouver diggings. The general impression at Fraser's River was, that there would be an immigration of 10,000 into British Columbia by the close of March, but there does not appear any good foundation for these extravagant expectations.

Major DOWNIE was on his way down from the upper Fraser River region by the Lillitos trail and Port Douglass. There were reports of his having made some valuable geographical discoveries on his journey from the coast to Fort Alexander, among which were a chain of lakes extending along the route one hundred and fifty miles, so that steamers drawing twelve inches of water can navigate a distance of 100 miles further than steamers drawing four feet, which latter run on Seton river, and a practicable portage of forty miles will then reach Fort Alexander. These reports are looked upon at Victoria as important—as, if true, the upper mining districts will be much more accessible than heretofore, being brought almost within water communication of Victoria.

Numerous buildings of wood and brick were being erected at Victoria, and real estate was said to be rising. The papers contain not a word bearing on the late San Juan difficulty.

NEW VOLUME OF SPARKLING ROMANCE!
OUT TO-DAY,
AT ONE O'CLOCK,
OUT TO-DAY,
AT ONE O'CLOCK,
OUT TO-DAY,
AT ONE O'CLOCK,
THE NEW-YORK MERCURY
FOR JANUARY 1,
1860.

With this number is commenced a NEW VOLUME of this regal depository of the RAREST GEMS OF AMERICAN LITERATURE AND ART,
It is printed from NEW TYPE,
And contains many
NEW FEATURES,
Prominent among which are the opening chapters of
A NEW MYSTERY OF NEW-YORK,
BY NED BUNTLINE,
whose world-renowned pictures of the World as it is—and particularly his powerful novels of life in the great City—have proved him to be the ablest of American romancers.

This startling and wonderful novelty is entitled
ELFRIDA,
THE RED ROVER'S DAUGHTER,
and is undoubtedly one of the grandest conceptions of the age. It is a mirror held up to nature, in which the millionaire's palace, the vagrant's hovel, the prisoner's cell, the abode of virtue, the haunt of vice, the storm-swept ocean, the mountain cavern, and all the terrible mysteries of City and wild life, are reflected with truly startling effect.

This brilliant Romance will be illustrated by the sensitive pencil of the far-famed and cannot fail to produce such a sensation throughout the country as has seldom been experienced.

THE WEEKLY MERCURY will also contain a very interesting and graphic sketch of
SAN FRANCISCO AND VICINITY,
BY BAYARD TAYLOR,
who contributes EXCLUSIVELY to THE NEW-YORK MERCURY, and whose inimitable productions are illustrated by accurate drawings from his own pencil.

Also, a new series of the famous "J. B." papers, entitled
"THINGS WE ALL TALK ABOUT," consisting of a satirical review of the freaks and follies of the age.

An Epicurean Melody, especially adapted to the season, written by the same popular author, entitled
AN ODE TO A PLUM PUDDING.

In addition to these and other well-known features of THE NEW-YORK MERCURY, such as "GOSSIPERS' CLUB," "LADIES' PROMENADE," &c., &c., the number for Jan. 1 contains SIX CHOICE COMPLETE ORIGINAL TALES, by the most popular writers in the country.

The whole forming the most attractive literary banquet ever spread before the public. And
IT IS READY TO-DAY,
At One O'Clock,
OUT TO-DAY,
At One O'Clock,
WILL BE SOLD TO-DAY
AT ALL NEWS AGENCIES.

A ROMANCE OF AMERICAN HISTORY,
BY A DISTINGUISHED AUTHOR.

The romantic events on which this beautiful story is founded occurred in the troubled times of 1782, immediately before the close of the Revolutionary War, and the recognition of American Independence—a time when strange events brought out strong character, and mighty trials a corresponding heroism. The most romantic imagination never invented fiction more exciting than the historical passages of those times—(strange to say, until now unappropriated by the novelist.) Manly heroism and womanly devotion are wrought to the highest degree, through a chain of events not less exciting than strange—not less strange than true.

As no more copies of the NEW VOLUME will be printed than are ordered, those who desire to begin with the commencement of the year will be able to do so by forwarding their subscriptions at once.

THE LEDGER FOR NEW-YEAR'S.

The NEW-YORK LEDGER for Jan. 1, 1860, (to be ready on Monday next,) will contain the first instalment of a new Story, by SYLVANUS COBB, Jr., entitled

WOLFGANG; Or,
The Whaler's Bride.
A Story of the Wild Coast.

This title is, as the reader will doubtless see at first from its title, a Story of the Sea and Shore. Mr. Cobb loves a life on the ocean wave, and is at home on the rolling deep. His Sea Stories are always admirable, and "WOLFGANG" is one of his very best.

The LEDGER for Jan. 7, 1860, also contains more of the thrilling stories of the "CASTLE DE GRESSY," and "THE RED RANGER."

Also,

MISS JELLABY'S MATCH—An account of the way in which a gossiping, mischief-making, Old Maid got "come up with" and extinguished.

Also,

THE SCULPTOR'S TRIUMPH—A thrilling and beautiful story of Love and Genius, Despair and Triumph. By ANNA CORA RITCHIE.

Also,

A DUEL EXTRAORDINARY Between a Captain of Texas Rangers and a Mexican Major of Lancers.

Also,

THE PLEDGE REDEEMED. Illustrated. By MARY W. BARTLEY GREEN. A Weird Story, Not to be Read at Midnight in a Lonely Churchyard.

Also,

LIZZIE LEE'S LOCKET—A beautiful and Illustrated Christmas Poem, which tells what happened one cold stormy Christmas Eve,

"When old Lizzie Lee—a maiden of 60—
With her toes
Almost frozen,
Sat growling, and groaning, and rocking her rickety
House in a chair
She had rocked in for many and many a year,
And never ceased grumbling
Till Old Nick—
With his pack
On his back—
Mighty quick
Down the chimney came tumbling."

Also, the following Poems:

WELCOME HOME. By Gen. MORRIS.
MY MARY. By ALICE CARY.
OLD LETTERS—(a Humorous Poem.) By JOHN G. SAXE.
1859, 1860. By WILLIAM ROSS WALLACE.
WINE—(in which the subject is treated, and not the Reader.) By THOS. DUNN ENGLISH.
A NIGHT SCENE. By GEORGE D. PRENTICE.
OUR BABY. By Mrs. SIGOURNEY.

Also,

APPLE-PIE. By "One who keeps his Eyes and Ears open," and also his mouth, when "Apple-Pie" is around.

Also,

GIVE IT UP—A Sketch by FANNY FERN, in which she gives the "horrid man" a "piece of her mind" on a subject that is just now attracting much attention from the public.

In addition to all these good things, THE LEDGER contains its usual variety of Editorials, Sketches, Wit and Wisdom, Current Items, Answers to Correspondents, &c., &c., &c.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS
AT A SACRIFICE.

The recent bold attempt to carry off some thousands of dollars' worth of jewelry from the magnificent stock of

Messrs. DEMPSEY & FARGIS,
No. 592 Broadway,

resulted in the apprehension of the shrewd robbers, and the recovery of every article! This extraordinary stroke of good luck has so pleased the enterprising firm, that they have resolved to let the public share it, by selling their superb stock of diamonds, watches, silver ware, lava, mosaic, coral, malachite and Roman setts jewelry, hair ornaments, &c., at cost, during the Holidays. We may add that Messrs. D. & F.'s inimitable art of engraving was not stolen, though certain persons have made the attempt.

MOTHER GOOSE FOR GROWN FOLKS.
A MIDDLE AGED.

A new and attractive Christmas volume. Printed on tinted paper, illustrated frontispiece by Billings. Elegantly bound in fancy muslin. Price 75 cents; extra paper, $1.

From the Very Early Dawn.

The plan of the book is this: the author, pleading this idea, (first propounded, we believe, by Canning, the great English statesman) that the rhymes of Mother Goose are a sort of Sybilline leaves, full of hidden meaning, and capable of development into lessons has selected certain well-known rhymes as texts from which to point a series of practical, pointed sermons. We have no idea who the author is, but the keen appreciation of human nature and theory will displeased would do no discredit to Lowell. To those of our readers who wish to give at Christmas a cheap, yet elegant token of remembrance, which has also a real value, we recommend them to invest in this last offspring of dear old Madame Goose.

"Of grave truth and sequel prophecy,"

From the Spending Poet.

In this clever volume, Mother Goose's Melodies, the hymns dear now and always to the heart of childhood—are followed by poems, lyrics, sentical plaintive, in fact of every mood, showing that her wisdom of books is by no means inalienable for grown folks, but entertainments always, as a mother, instructive, beauty with grave truth, and not unseldom a secret beauty.

The book is so surprisingly clever and, and whoever buys Mother Goose hereafter for the little folks, should put in his pocket, also, Mother Goose, for Grown Folks, to read after they have been put to bed.

From the Rochester Morning Transcript.

To every age this little book adapts itself; here are the original melodies for the children, with their never-failing charms, and accompanying each are appropriate rhymes for the "Grown Folks," of grandeur, beauty, with a moral sentiment. A New-York critic, speaking of the book, says that Longfellow, Lowell and Whittier have expressed great admiration for it, and a Boston writer asserts that some of the pleasant expressions contained therein are worthy of those, our greatest poets. As a specimen of the character and style of the book the following is selected:

A tailor in his loom would twist him a twist,
And twisting his twists, seven twists he doth twist;
If one twist in twisting, untwists from the twist,
The twist, untwisting, untwists the twist.

A tarnished rainbow overhead
Lets down to life its varying thread;
Love's blue—joy's gold—and fair between,
Rose's shifting light of emerald green:
With either side in deep relief,
A crimson pain—a violet grief.
Wouldst thou, amid their gleaming hues,
Clutch after those, and those refuse?
Believe—as thy beseeching eyes
Follow their lines and sound the skies,—
There, where the fadeless glories shine,
An unseen angel twists the twine.

And be th

THE POPE TO BE PRAYED FOR.—The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Quebec has issued a pastoral letter, enjoining public prayers that the Pope may be relieved from the distresses which environ him. The efforts of the people of Italy are alluded to in the following fashion:

In keeping the news of the peace concluded at Villafranca between the Emperors of France and Austria, we conceived the pleasing hope that calm would be restored to the Papal States, and that all fears for the temporal power of the Sovereign Pontiff were at an end. But the tidings which reach us every week from Italy apprise us that the storm raised against the temporal sovereignty of Rome for some time, threatens now to burst with all its fury. Already has Italy rejected the authority of her legitimate sovereigns, and the Romagna, Tuscany, Modena and Parma have cast off the yoke of religion, and have declared themselves independent of the Holy See, and have joined the Piedmontese which have annexed Savoy and Nice.

It is not necessary to inform you, M. T. C. P., who, in the plan of the counsels of all authority, I find evidence that the temporal power of the sovereign Pontiff is the greatest obstacle to the liberty of the People of that Peninsula, and that it is the spiritual power that they desire to overthrow, because it restrains their depravity and passions, and imposes an obstacle to the progress of error and impiety. They know that the temporal power is convertible to the Chief of the Church to secure his independence, and then they will be more easily able to fulfill his ministry. This is why they strive to wrest from him the possessions which for many centuries he has held, which are guaranteed to him by many incontestable titles.

GROCERIES & PROVISIONS.

A TRUTH.
"It is nothing to gain popularity, but it is rarely that men retain it. Like money, 'come easy, go easy,' popularity is a fickle affair, and requires careful nursing to keep it alive. Especially is this observable in mercantile affairs. If the reputation, which is but another name for popularity, be won by actual merit, it is lasting. Mr. THOMAS E. AGNEW, the well-known importer, grocer, flour and tea-dealer, No. 289 Greenwich and 6 Murray-st., has,
by his straightforward course,
the fairness of his prices,
and the excellence of his stock secured a reputation which will be lasting.
With a capital of $50,000,
he can defy competition, and afford to sell, at either wholesale or retail, at prices to suit everybody. Give him a call and be satisfied with the truth of our assertions."—New-York Atlas.

UNION RESOLUTIONS, &c., &c., &c.

By dint of gratuitous advertising, a bountiful display of gas, transparencies, banners, and a band of music, the Union meeting at Washington Hall last evening was enabled to do the following Call:

A Democratic Union meeting will be held at Washington Hall, corner of Fourth and South Seventh streets, Williamsburgh, on Friday evening, Dec. 23, 1859. The following-named persons respectfully invite all fellow-citizens (irrespective of party) who love the Union of the Constitution and the Union as bequeathed us by the wisdom of our patriotic ancestors, to take counsel as above."

Signed by Aldermen HARRINGTON and 30 other prominent citizens.

Mr. HENRY DRAKE called the meeting to order, and moved that Alderman HARRINGTON, President of the Common Council, be appointed Chairman, which was unanimously agreed, and Mr. KALTENBACH took the Chair.

Mr. DRAKE moved the selection of a list of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries, which was likewise adopted with enthusiasm.

Mr. HARRINGTON, on his own motion, appointed a committee of one to invite the strangers to enter the hall.

The chairman then said they had met for an important purpose as citizens of the United States of America. [Applause.] He hoped the meeting would resist any remarks upon the recent outrages at Harper's Ferry, that would be felt North as well as South. They were told that there was no danger, but they knew that other themselves to be deceived. But such remarks would lead to discussion, as in the case of Harper's Ferry. Watchfulness was the price of liberty. In unity there was strength, and obeying this rule they could attain their object.

Vice-President HARRIS then read two letters, which had been received by the Committee from invited speakers. The first was from Mr. ERASTUS BROOKS; the second, from Mayor WOOD, was received with three cheers. Letters were also received from Messrs. D. SANFORD, CHARLES O'CONOR, and DANIEL S. DICKINSON.

Hon. ANDREW J. PARKER was next introduced, and received with a storm of applause.

Judge PARKER said he had come a very long distance to meet them—not in any partisan spirit—but for the purpose of promoting the interests of party, and to speak upon a subject of the highest importance to all of us—and all that concerns most deeply the prosperity of the Union. But, he met them as a free, intelligent assemblage, composed as he trusted of the representatives of all political parties of the day, who had come together, laying aside all partisan feelings and prejudices, to worship at one common altar, and to speak on behalf of the country. [Applause.] He trusted there were men of all trades, of all professions, native-born citizens, whose fathers fought for the Union, and adopted citizens, who came with their wives and their children. He hoped all were animated by the spirit, the love of country, which should preponderate over all other feelings in a crisis like this. [Applause.] It was a crisis. The subject was a serious one. The country was excited. It was agitated. Excitement existed everywhere. The Press shows it. The voices of the people we must show it. The business of the City shows it. Stocks are shaken, and the Southern students here are going to their homes. One Southern State by one branch of its Legislature, passes a bill to provide for disunion, while the Senate passes the bill recognizing that the time has come when the South must secede from the Union. There is a alarm everywhere that the day is fast coming when this Union—this glorious family of States—is to be dissolved. What has produced this? We are in this great peril, and the hopes of ancestors and posterity are at stake. What has caused it? Date few weeks since men from the North invaded Southern State and raised the standard of rebellion, and sought to bring the slaves in the vicinity to a servile insurrection. But the rebellion was subdued, and it was this aggressive act that had caused the alarm in the South. Though the invaders were small in numbers, their object was of a character to cause alarm and creating a panic throughout the country, it was never disguised. And they were backed by 1,500 pikes and hundred of muskets and ammunition. All this must have cost something—who furnished the money? The South was alarmed. This was the first bold attempt that had been made upon her institutions. The agitation by the Abolitionists of the North had been growing louder and louder until it had culminated in this invasion of the South, which was totally unprepared for such a measure. What lay at the bottom of this act, so well calculated to strike terror into the South, where a servile insurrection would produce the worst possible horrors of war? What caused this? What mighty subject had agitated this great nation? It was that question of Slavery. He did not like to talk about it, but he would look for a moment at it. Seventy-two years ago, when the Constitution was formed, Slavery existed in all the States—was profitable at the South then as at the North. When the Constitution was framed, this question was discussed, and then provided for, and the compromise of the Constitution should remain inviolate forever. [Applause.] Our fathers settled this troublesome question as it should have been settled, and we should not attempt to disturb it. Whoever would disturb it would peril the permanence of the Union. At the time of the formation of the Constitution, the Slave-trade existed. It was provided in that instrument, by a committee who made a report, that Congress should abolish the Slave-trade after the year 1808. An amendment was offered in that Convention, substituting the year 1808—postponing eight years longer that nefarious Slave-trade. They voted upon that amendment by States, and of those seven States that voted to extend the Slave-trade to 1808, were New-Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut. Yet in these three States, more than all others, is the question of abolition agitated. [Hisses and applause.] These three Christian States—the Northern States—voted to prolong the Slave-trade eight years, and yet, at this day rise up against the South—by their preaches and doctrines—they argue their morality and purity upon this question, and if they do not seek the destruction of the South, take a course that must in its nature lead to it. Four States voted against that amendment, and were in favor of restricting the Slave-trade to the year 1808, and among those four States were Delaware and Virginia. [Applause.] Virginia, the mother of Presidents—the State that produced WASHINGTON—[applause]—Virginia, thank God, was one of the first that voted against the amendment, and how had she been repaid for it? Ask those who sent John Brown there! This question of Slavery would dissolve this Union, if it was ever dissolved, which God forbid! But, since it had been settled by the Constitution, should it not remain settled forever? Upon the Constitution depended the union of these States, and its provisions should be maintained immaculate. There were other compromises in the Constitution—some by the South to the North—some by the North to the South; checks and balances nicely adjusted by those patriots who formed it as the representatives of all these States. The fugitive slave law was a part of that compromise upon which it was founded was adopted in the convention unanimously, and yet there were those in Connecticut, New Hampshire and Massachusetts making war upon it. The question of the morality of Slavery was not open to us. It was left by the Constitution to the decision of the States. It was for them to discuss its morality, whether it was a blessing or a curse, and any attempt to interfere was unconstitutional. He deemed that the North had not any right to say one word here upon the question of Slavery, whether Slavery was right or wrong. [Applause.]

Judge PARKER, in continuance, said: It was none of their business to intermeddle with the affairs of the South. It was folly to discuss the question of Slavery. The political question—all they had to do with—was settled by the Constitution. Our ground was non-interference. In no other way could this Union be maintained. All sections had a deep interest in preserving the Union. The laborer, the trader, and every business man—all were alike interested. Divide the Union, and all would go down. Even now the South was trying to send its cotton to Europe in its own ships. Separate us in twain, and our trade and business would be destroyed, and we would become insignificant in the eyes of the world. The wars of the world had come from passion and prejudice. The passions of the human heart stirred up hatred, and let that hatred be exerted between the North and South, and the raid of John Brown would be but the beginning of a series of bloodier scenes, which would make this country one of a hell from a heaven. [Applause.] This way was be but the question alone. Was there any reason at the South as well as at the North, why the North had kept quiet, and would this calamity have occurred? No, we would have been faithless to our Union-savers, as if they were guilty of a crime in making attempts to quiet agitation. He wanted to vindicate the right of the South to be let alone. [Applause.] They were accused of truckling to the South, because they wanted to let the South settle the question of Slavery as they pleased. [Applause.] He did not intend to arraign any great political party of the North as designing this raid of John Brown, but he knew that doctrines were very generally preached which led to John Brown's invasion. Unless this agitation stopped, the Union would be dissolved, and the only way to avert that calamity was to control the Pulpit and the Press by the force of public sentiment. [Applause.] The Press and the Pulpit would be led to fall in with the general sentiment of the people. No one would then dare to meddle. That public sentiment was now being expressed in these meetings, and they were ready to sustain the American flag and the American Union. [Applause.] Let them say to party leaders, "If you mislead us we will not follow you." [Applause.] "You have misled us, and endangered the prosperity of the Union, and we abandon you forever." [Applause.] Let the South, too, forbear; and secede in the North as in brothers and friends, as they had done in the Revolution, [applause] in the later wars with England, and with Mexico. [Applause.] None would like to live exposed of a divided Union; this great nation trifling in the east, and its stars divided. [Applause.] That division would be the end of all our hopes on earth. All nations recognized the progress of American people, and if the people would consider, as they had described, they might have confidence that nothing would dissolve this Union, but that it would exist forever. [Continued applause.]

Mr. E. C. FERRIN was the next speaker, and spoke at some length; and was followed by Col. T. B. THORPE, in the usual entertaining vein of that speaker.

The following are the resolutions prepared for the consideration of the meeting:

Resolved, That the last treasonable, though abortive, effort to provoke a servile insurrection in a Southern State, and an offer of a large quantity of arms for that purpose obtained by the contribution of Northern men holding high social and political positions, the development of an extensive correspondence, and an organized effort to afford aid and comfort to such movement, the expressions of sympathy to its perpetrators and condolence at its defeat, the effort to prevent the necessary and just execution of the laws, to convert its treasonable actors and abettors into saints and martyrs, and to furnish sympathetic political orations and demonstrations as their excuse, have rendered it necessary that good and patriotic men of all sections of the United States should unite in expressions of strong condemnation and repudiation of such acts, and avow their resolutions to enforce equal punishment against all such aggressions upon the rights of the South, and all such crimes against the Government of the Union.

Resolved, That as the experience of all past ages has taught us that the great danger to Republican Governments arises from the slow undermining process of internal dissension and disaffection, we are thereby admonished to watch carefully and jealously every attempt to create hostility between the different sections of the Union, and particularly to meet with decided reprobation the first efforts of those honest men who carry on their treasonable acts under the protection of its flag and the immunity of its citizenship.

Resolved, That we will not, by our votes or influence, countenance the agitation of those questions of domestic policy which excite any two sections of the Union against each other, and call for an "irrepressible conflict" of Northern or Southern, Eastern or Western interest or feeling.

Resolved, That the compact formed by the founders of our Government, giving to the population of each section the right to settle their domestic institutions in their own way, involves the distinctive features which constitute the foundation of our liberties—the right of self-government, and is equally necessary for the protection of the independence of the North and the South, and that all attempts of political leaders to provoke a relentless and bloody crusade between the North and the South, can only terminate in producing injury to the whole population, and destroying the interests of the colored race.

UNION MEETING AT NEWARK, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J., Friday, Dec. 23.

In response to an extensively signed call, a large and enthusiastic Union meeting was held here last evening. Mayor BRADDER presided. The following resolutions were unanimously passed:

THE RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, A call for a public meeting in this city has been circulated, and signed by men of all parties, the objects whereof were therein declared to be, to express unwavering attachment to the Union and Constitution of the United States—to discountenance the suspicion that in any event they can be abandoned—to discourage every attempt to alienate any portion of the common country—and to express the sentiments of the citizens of every section that the people of New-Jersey have no intention or desire to interfere with the sovereignty, internal affairs or domestic institutions of Sister States, but will oppose and resist the same;

Now, we, the people of Newark, in pursuance of said call, in public meeting convened, without distinction of party—representing in sentiment, as we believe we do, our brethren throughout the State—proud of the Revolutionary history of New-Jersey, a state which was the third to ratify the Constitution of the United States, and the first to ratify the 10th amendment thereto, which guarantees the rights reserved to the people; conscious that we have never in any way interfered with the reserved rights of sister States, yet are willing, for the sake of restoring public tranquillity and kind relations throughout the land, to express our vows of fealty to the Government established by our fathers; to declare our unwavering and undiminished attachment to that unity of Government which constitutes all the people of all the States, one people, and to that Constitution which was established among other things, in order "to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity and promote the general welfare."

Therefore resolved, That by no interpretation of the compact between the States do we claim any authority or power, as citizens of a State, or by our Representatives in Congress, to interfere with the institution of Slavery as existing in other States; and that we will oppose and resist all attempts to violate the rights of those States.

Resolved, That the recent invasion of Virginia, by desperate and misguided men, and the seizure of an Arsenal of the United States, were acts of treason respectively against that State and the United States, which merited not only the judgment of the law in its most penal form, but the execrations of every law-abiding and faithful citizen everywhere; that we utterly scorn and repudiate the idea of any complicity with or sympathy for such traitors, or their acts, their emissaries or confederates.

Resolved, That the conduct of Virginia in that crisis she has passed has been marked by justice in inflicting upon traitors the punishment which they deserved, and by forbearance in giving them a fair trial by jury, and meets with and deserves our sympathy; and if there be any such men in this Confederacy who have furnished arms, munitions, money or other material aid, or encouraged by word or deed any man or men to invade Virginia, for the purpose of exciting servile insurrection, civil war or internal commotion, by which life or property has been imperiled, that man or men we denounce as traitors, not only to the laws of the land, but to the principles of free Constitutional Government as here established.

Resolved, That the adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States speak to us, and every other citizen, with the authoritative voice of law, and on that account are entitled to the highest confidence and respect of the people; and we recognize its decisions in all cases without exception, as the judgments of a court of last resort, and binding upon every State and people in this Confederacy, until the same shall have been overruled, in the manner prescribed by law.

Resolved, That we reprobate as deserving of unqualified censure, all disloyalty to the Union of these States, all attempts to alienate one section of the United States from the other, and all language and conduct calculated to excite hostility or jealousy between them; and that all sects, for party purposes, or others, that strive to excite bitterness or antagonism between those bound together by the ties of political brotherhood, and a common language, history, ancestry, and race, merit the unqualified condemnation of all patriots.

Resolved, That we have no sympathy with Abolitionism in any of its forms, whether outspoken and defiant, or concealed—but abhor and detest it, its purposes and tendencies, and spurn all political fellowship with those who profess its doctrines, or are imbued with its spirit.

Resolved, That the enactment by Congress of laws to secure the rendition of persons held to service or labor, in one State, under the laws thereof, who may have escaped into another, to the parties to whom such labor or service is due, is clearly authorized by the Constitution and is entitled to the respect and obedience of the people, and that all State legislation, or individual effort designed or adapted to defeat the object of such enactments is highly reprehensible, as in violation of the Constitution and the rights of our Southern fellow-citizens, under the same.

Resolved, That we condemn the circulation of Anti-Slavery books, pamphlets, magazines, newspapers or other matter, printed or written, among the people of the South, by citizens of non-slaveholding States, or the publication thereof for such purpose of circulation, whether the same be addressed to bond or free, or to different classes of the white inhabitants; because such circulation violates the rights of the people directly interested in the subject of Slavery, and foments discord between sovereign States.

Resolved, That we regard as our brethren of the Republican denomination, not only by reason of some promises of the Constitution, but as far as in us lies, to enforce the complete recognition of all their rights, without exception; and to these purposes, we pledge ourselves hereby renewing the assurances of amity and protection, mutually interchanged by our forefathers.

Eloquent addresses were made, deprecating agitation, by Mr. T. F. FRELINGHUYSEN, WM. R. MACDONALD, Col. JAS. W. WALL, and other distinguished citizens of New Jersey. A great number of letters were received from prominent public men by the Committee, and which they intend to publish.

UNION MEETING AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 23.

A Union meeting was held here to-night, and it was attended by from 400 to 500 persons.

Resolutions were offered, denunciatory of the fire-eaters of the South and the fanatics of the North, and proposing as a remedy for present evils to rally around the Constitution and the Union.

A substitute was then offered, declaring that this meeting is inopportune and unnecessary, which the majority favored.

There was much confusion throughout the proceedings, and the meeting separated in disorder, to the music of a full band.

The falling of the platform, with many gentlemen thereon, was among the incidents.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

A MEETING OF THE BAR.—A meeting of the members of the Kings County Bar, was held yesterday in the City Hall, to take action relative to the death of Judge HEMMOND. The meeting was called to order by PHILIP S. CROOM, Esq., who nominated for Chairman Judge LOTT. Judge GRAHAM was elected Secretary. After remarks, alluding to the high character of deceased, had been made by Messrs. JAMES C. SMITH and PHILIP S. CROOM, Judge GREENWOOD offered some appropriate and feeling resolutions, which were adopted. In accordance with the resolutions a large number of gentlemen attended the funeral of the deceased.

DEATH OF A SHIP CAPTAIN.—The funeral of Capt. ALEXANDER C. MARSHALL, brother of Capt. CHAS. H. MARSHALL, will take place from his late residence, No. 17 Monroe-place, Brooklyn, to-day, at 10 o'clock A. M. in respect to the memory of deceased, who was long a ship-master out of this port, the flags of the shipping were yesterday displayed at half-mast. Capt. MARSHALL was sixty years of age.

Musical.

ORATORIO.—The New-York Harmonic Society will give its annual Christmas performance of the "Messiah" to-night, at the Academy of Music. The solos will be interpreted by an unusual force of first-class artists, foremost amongst whom is Madame ANNA BISHOP, Mr. J. R. THOMAS, Mrs. WERTHEIMER, Mr. GEORGE SIMPSON and others. Long practice has made the members of the society thoroughly familiar with the choruses; and we may therefore expect a fine performance in every respect.

Rev. Dr. Cox gives his idea of the "Broad Church" as follows: "The Broad Church! Yes. Make God's Church broad enough to take in Simon Magus and Judas and Satan! Out upon it. It is all done stultifying—and not as done other."

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

THE PUBLIC STORE CONTRACT.—It is proposed in certain quarters to call a public indignation meeting, to be held at the Fifth Ward Hotel, to express disapprobation of the action of Secretary COBB in giving the Public Store contract to Messrs. MAYNARD, MERRILL & Co., and of the conduct of these gentlemen since they obtained the contract, in turning out of office many laboring men whom their predecessors had appointed. It is alleged that the contractors have substituted political favorites of their own in the public stores for those who have been discharged, and that the object is to gain favor with those whose votes can elevate JOHN C. MAYNARD to Congress from the Third District. A strong effort will be made by those who have been turned out of office and their friends to induce Messrs. SICKLES, BARR, MAGLAY, and other Representatives in Congress from this City to exert their influence in having the contract annulled. The call for the meeting has received a great many signatures.

A CHRISTMAS OPPORTUNITY.—The Charity Bazaar for the benefit of the Home for the Friendless, No. 30 East Twenty-ninth-street, has been so successful, and so liberally furnished with supplies, that the managers have been solicited to continue it. They, however, find it necessary to close this (Saturday evening. Whatever articles shall remain will be on sale at the store-rooms of the Home during the holidays, at reasonable prices. The favors of those not provided with gifts for their little ones, will, therefore, be gratefully appreciated during the ensuing week. On Monday evening, at 7½ o'clock, the children of the Home will have their Christmas tree, as usual, in the Chapel.

THE BAXTER ASSOCIATION.—When Col. WARD B. BURNETT was wounded in the Battle of Cerro Gordo, Mexico, the command of the First Regiment of Volunteers from this State devolved upon CHAS. BAXTER. He fell mortally wounded in the battle of Cherubusco, and the Baxter Association honored his memory on Thursday evening, by a ball at the Apollo Rooms. The portrait of Lieut.-Col. BAXTER, draped with the National standard, was suspended in the ball-room, and commemorative speeches were made in the supper-room by different members of the Association. The company did not break up until 5 o'clock yesterday morning.

LAUNCH.—The steamship Pernano, built by Messrs. WESTERVELT & KNOX, was successfully launched from the foot of Houston-street yesterday forenoon, a large concourse of spectators being present. This steamer is intended to ply between the ports of the South Pacific and Panama. The engines, which have been built by the Morgan Iron works, are nearly completed, and the steamer will be ready to sail for her destination early in the Spring.

ELECTION OF ASSISTANT-ENGINEER.—An election for Assistant Engineer of the Fire Department for the Harlem District took place last night, with the following result:

J. McCloskey	1,610
W. T. Mawbey	1,409
McCloskey's majority	201

The result gives much satisfaction to the firemen.

ANOTHER POLICEMAN DEAD.—Patrolman JOHN BAKER, of the Seventh Precinct, died Thursday morning of small-pox. He leaves a wife and five children in needy circumstances. The officers of the Seventh Precinct yesterday each contributed one day's pay—$142 altogether—for their relief. This death is the third which has occurred in the police force during the last week.

REPUBLICAN CENTRAL COMMITTEES.—The Republican Central Committee and the Young Men's Central Committee met in joint session last evening. After disposing of some items of business, a committee was appointed to wait upon Senator SEWARD on his arrival in this City, and make arrangements for giving him a public reception.

ICE IN THE HUDSON RIVER.—The Hudson River is rapidly filling up with large fields of ice, which render navigation quite unsafe. Within the last few days several vessels have been injured, and one steamboat, the Saratoga, has been sunk.

Fires.

IN EAST TWELFTH-STREET.—A fire broke out last evening in a row of stables in the rear of No. 20 East Twelfth-street. The stable, owned by PATRICK MCGINN, valued at $200, was destroyed, together with hay and feed to the amount of $250. Four horses were burned, valued at $400. None of the property was insured.

FIRE.—The building No. 104 Seventh-avenue was slightly damaged by fire yesterday forenoon.

Coroners' Inquests.

CHILDREN PATAILLY BURNED.

MARGARET SMITH, a child six years of age, residing at No. 240 East Thirteenth-street, died yesterday from burns which she received a few weeks ago, in consequence of her dress igniting while she was fanning the fire with her apron. Coroner SCHMITTO investigated the case. Yesterday noon ELLEN LYNCH, a child four years of age, living at No. 7 Clark-street, was left by her parents in a room with her little sister. On the return of her mother the child was found dead on the floor, with all her clothing burnt off, as is supposed, in consequence of her dress having come in contact with the grate. Coroner O'KEEFE held an inquest at No. 7 Clark-street, where the accident occurred.

BRAKEMAN KILLED.

WM. HINMAN, a brakeman on the Hudson River Railroad, slipped between the cars yesterday morning while the train on which he was engaged was approaching Stryker's Bay. He was almost instantly killed, and his body was brought down to the Thirty-first-street depôt, where an inquest was held by Coroner GAMBLE. Deceased was 19 years of age, and a native of this City.

BEWARE OF SLIPPERY STOOPS.

On Monday evening MARTIN STRINGT, a middle-aged German, while ascending the back stoop of his residence, No. 237 Third-avenue, slipped on the ice, and was precipitated to the cellar beneath. He sustained internal injuries which resulted yesterday in his death. An inquest was held by Coroner SCHMITTO, and a verdict of accidental death was rendered.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—SAMUEL COMPTON, a butcher in the Fulton Market, fell off a Fourth-avenue car last evening, when in Grand-street, near the Bowery. The car passed over his body, causing death in a few minutes afterwards. An inquest will be held to-day.

Police Reports.

A THIEVISH RAG-PICKER.

The house of Mrs. Margaret Eigeninger, in West Forty-ninth-street, near Tenth-avenue, was entered yesterday during her absence, and $79 were stolen from a trunk which the thief forced open. Mrs. Eigeninger's little son saw James Mooney, a young rag-picker, commit the robbery, but was so intimidated by his threats that he did not raise an alarm. Mooney left the house with his booty, but was subsequently arrested by Officer Martin, and committed to answer by Justice QUACKENBUSH.

A DISHONEST DOMESTIC.

Margaret Vanderhoof, a servant in the family of Mrs. Blakeman, of No. 260 West Twenty-fourth-street, was apprehended, yesterday, on a charge of having stolen from her employer a gold watch and chain, worth $65. Margaret admitted the truth of the accusation, and was committed by Justice QUACKENBUSH to answer for her delinquency.

A RECTIFICATION.

In Thursday's TIMES, by a transposition of names, Mr. Gustav Fucholsky, of No. 237 Division-street, was called the defendant in a case of Grand larceny before Justice STEERS. Mr. Fucholsky was the complainant, and George Brown, alias Charles Knapp, was the defendant.

ARREST OF FEMALE PICKPOCKETS.—MARGARET CONNERY and BRIDGE CARTER were arrested yesterday for picking the pocket of a lady of a purse containing $40 32. The offenders were locked up at the Police Head-quarters.

STREET DEPARTMENT.

OPENING OF CONTRACTS.

The bids for regulating and grading the Eighth-avenue from Eighty-second-street to One-hundred-and-second-street, were opened yesterday, and Mr. Daniel J. Malarky was found to be the lowest bidder. He offered to do the work for $30,399 67. He gives sureties in the sum of $15,000, and is allowed two years' time in which to complete the work.

Menard & Casey estimated that the cost of repairing and altering the house of Hose Company No. 11, would be $2,700. The contract was awarded to them.

Proprietors for the Holidays.

While ambitious politicians, disappointed officers, and fanatical and ill-tempered persons, are prognosticating utter ruin to the Union, and all sorts of evils to come upon the country, it is rather curious, and really encouraging, to observe how philosophically these same people look forward to the impending crisis, and with what imperturbable good humor and pleasant countenance they are preparing for the holidays. The great masses of the people are quietly and pleasantly pursuing their various occupations, and, if one must tell the truth, nothing seems further from their thoughts than the "negro question" and its attending agitations. You may travel from one end of the City to the other, in stores, banks, private dwellings, and boarding-houses, lounge in the one, and sit down to dinner in the other, without hearing one word about Harper's Ferry or the dissolution of the Union. Everybody acts as if they had long since got tired of the first, and they have not yet seemingly begun to think of the other; and if one did not read the reports of the proceedings, or rather no proceedings, in Congress, they would be forced to believe that the people in this part of the world were as peaceful and happy as sinful humanity may expect to be, and were looking forward to Christmas week with unusual liveliness and spirit.

The splendid bazaars on Broadway, and other business streets, were never more gorgeous and brilliant in appearance than now, and holiday gifts were never so beautifully and elaborately got up as at the present season. Instead of mourning over the approaching destruction of "this glorious confederation of States," the matrons, one and all, and their daughters, every one, seem to be entirely taken up with the thought of what St. Nicholas will be kind enough to present them with during the coming season of social enjoyment. The matrons expect rich dresses of chocolate brown, or glossy black, moire antique, with sets of Point A'Quille or Point d'Applique to match, and further enriched by a few sparkling ornaments, such as a diamond brooch and ear-rings. Others will look anxiously for the long-wished-for service of solid gold, elegantly chased, for which they have been chasing their husbands for at least a half dozen years, and the secret hope of soon being gratified adds a most insinuating charm to their behavior to these unsuspicious individuals during the last six week. Matrons of less pretensions would well be content with more modest indications of their husband's affection, and will be willing to let them off for the gift of a pretty little gold watch, a pearl bracelet, or some other less valuable trifle.

As for the young ladies, everything healthful that the ingenuity of man could produce has been sought out by the New-York merchants, and is now temptingly exposed to challenge the admiration and invite the purses of their admirers.

Knowing that there are thousands of fair ladies who every morning cast their eyes over the columns of the TIMES, one cannot do less than wish that they may all receive the pretty things they most wish for, and that by this time next week the merchants' stocks of diamonds, trinkets, elegantly-bound books and other valuables will be surprisingly diminished.

Lest they should forget it, it might be mentioned to husbands, fathers and brothers, that the week for making presents will begin on Monday next, and that each gentleman holding this relation is expected to prepare for that important period. To inspire them with a proper enthusiasm for the occasion, is it necessary to betray the sacredly guarded secrets of their fair relatives, and tell them of the many beautiful articles which have been styly prepared for them by loving hands? The handsome watch-cases of netted silk and gold, the comfortable slippers of finest cloth, embroidered so nearly, the warm dressing-gowns of gay cashmere, quilted so beautifully in scarlet satin, the pretty smoking-caps worked in every variety of pattern; these, and many other things which ladies like to knit and work for those they love, having been hidden away in quiet corners while husbands or fathers were by, will receive the last finishing-touch to-day, and be laid away until Monday, when it is to be hoped they will be accepted with becoming meekness and gratitude.

The Cartoons of Raphael.

Mr. CHARLES B. NORTON, the well-known Bibliographical Agent in Appleton's Building, has just done a good service to all lovers of Art, by securing from the London publishers, for sale in New-York, fine paper copies, thirty-eight by twenty-five inches, of a new series of impressions, from the Government plates, of RAPHAEL's magnificent cartoons at Hampton Court. These plates are in the best state of preservation, and the impressions are exquisitely fresh and vigorous—the only perceptible difference between them and the earlier copies, so dear to all amateurs, being in the price at which they are offered. It is true, this difference is slightly noticeable: the set of seven cartoons, originally struck off, and published at the rate of 10 guineas, or $350, the set, in London, being now produced by Messrs. DAY & SONS, Engravers to Her Majesty, and sold in New-York at the inconceivable cost of $10. A limited number only will be allowed by the Government to be struck off, when the plates will be destroyed. The monumental beauty of these celebrated masterpieces of the art of design has made their fame a household word wherever art is known; and as the special characteristics of cartoon drawings fit them far better than oil canvases or frescoes for literal reproduction by the engraver's burin, it is really no exaggeration to say that there is no other way in which the genius of the "divine Urbinese" can be so well appreciated by those who are denied the privilege of studying him in Florence, Madrid, or Rome, as through these admirable engravings of his designs for the Flemish weavers. It is a curious fact, by the way, that a superb border-piece from one of the tapestries which were woven at Arras after the Cartoons, long did duty in a Custom-house office of one of our New-England seaports as a door-mat. Upon a close inspection of the arabesques in the design, "the excess of glory obscured," and beautiful still beneath the blight of long and ignorant neglect, it was rendered probable that the border in question had belonged to the tapestry known as the "Feed my Sheep," which for tenderness and delicacy of imagination, may claim, perhaps, the highest rank in the noble series. The history of this strayed fragment of the splendid past could be traced no further back than to the steward of a Rotterdam bark, by whom it had been used to wrap up his goods and chattels, and who had bestowed it as "a bit of carpet," upon its New-England possessor. It probably belonged to the third series of tapestries woven from the Cartoons, on the order of a Roman prince who never took or paid for the goods.

PURITY THE BLOOD.

Superior to all others are known to be BRANDRETH'S Pills, which simply and without any, the least danger, remove those matters from the bowels and circulation which occasion or sustain disease. Colds, coughs, and influenza are cured at once by a few doses.

If three or four pills do not relieve pain of the bowels, which is generally produced at this season by cold, take three more; and if this does not remove the pain, take three or four more. There is no danger in taking the pills. Calomel and jalap are a thousand times more harsh than BRANDRETH'S Pills, which are mild but effectual, taking hold of nothing but impure humors. Be not afraid of them if you are sick. No does will hurt that is required to operate.

Hear what Mrs. BUSHNOUS, of No. 240 Adams-street, Brooklyn, states, December 20, 1859:

I have used no other medicine than BRANDRETH'S Pills for the last twenty years. I have administered them with invariable success in typhus and scarlet fevers, small pox, whooping cough, measles, worms, to ladies previous to, and immediately after, confinement. With a box or two of BRANDRETH'S Pills in the house, happen what may, I would not care whether the doctor lived next door or twenty miles off.

Read what a single dose did.

Mr. JAMES SULLIMAN, editor and proprietor of the Westchester County Journal, says, Dec. 13, 1859:—About two years ago I ruptured myself, and have worn a truss ever since. In the beginning of last month I was taken with a slight pain in the upper orifice of the rupture. The pain gradually increased till on the third day I could not stand at all, nor could I find any position in bed to give me the least ease. The symptoms were altogether those of strangulated hernia. I thought your Pills might afford me some little relief, and took three of the Vegetable Universale. They operated in about four hours, immediately after which all pain ceased, and I have been able ever since to attend to my business without the slightest interruption.

Sold at the principal office, 294 Canal-street, N. Y., and by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

HARTLEY DELIVERED AND DISCHARGED FROM THE WAR.

DR. HARTLEY begs to announce to those of his patients with whom he has been in communication, that he has, in compliance with their special requests, made arrangements to establish his Bar Institution in New-York; and he generously offers to attend all sufferers free of charge, until cured—thereby proving his success unequaled, and protecting the deaf from being swindled by paying self-styled Aurists exorbitant fees in advance, and the infliction of still more serious evils, by permitting the application of dangerous remedies by inexperienced and unskillful hands.

Dr. H. may here state that he has no connection whatever with any person advertising to cure deafness; neither has he given permission for the publication of a certificate, purporting to emanate from him; and cannot, therefore, be responsible for any alarming consequences resulting from rashness and desperation. The loss of money may not be material to some persons, but the deprivation of one of the most important of the senses, ought to be regarded and treated with more than ordinary solicitude.

Deafness, noise in the head, and all disagreeable discharges from the ear, speedily and permanently removed, without causing the least pain or inconvenience. A cure in all cases guaranteed where information does not exist.

Thirteen years' close and almost undivided attention to this branch of special practice, has enabled him to reduce his treatment to such a degree of success as to find the most confirmed and obstinate cases yield by a steady attention to the means prescribed.

The destruction, by fire, of the Philadelphia Ear Infirmary, of which Dr. HARTLEY was the head—having released him from its duties in that city, he has established permanently his institution, for the exclusive treatment of Ear Diseases, at No. 164 Fourteenth-street, opposite the Academy of Music.

Consultations and examinations every morning.

Just published, a pamphlet, by Dr. HARTLEY, on Diseases of the Ear, Its Causes, Remedy, Prevention and Cure. Price 10 cents by mail or otherwise.

GOLD-HUNTERS IN CHIRIQUI.

[illegible] Chiriqui Exploring Company [illegible] of their Supercargoes and Passengers for Sale, Field and Flood—Alleged Discovery of the Second California.

[illegible] ago, it will be remembered, the romantic, deep-pocketed and fleet little schooner Nautilus, formerly in the United States Revenue service, left this City for Chiriqui, with a party of adventurers, whose avowed purpose was to delve among the mountains and streams of Chiriqui for the metals of gold. The oft-repeated story—which dates the first printing of Robinson Crusoe, and still remains proof to the contrary, by many deemed about quite forgotten—of mammoth golden chunks lying strewed around the skeleton forms of the aboriginal chiefs, and of huge monuments of solid gold being deeply buried in the forests with the unknown chieftains, stimulated the explorers to go forth on their gold-hunting adventure. Upon the production of the hucas themselves, they placed very slim estimate. These ancient Indian tumuli, once the sacred depositories of vast and unheeded wealth, were long ago, they believe, rifled of the bulk of their precious contents by the earlier Spanish colonists and avaricious Mexicans. Leaving to dullard hands unequipped digging among the Indian mounds, they essayed a daring original project—discovery of the sources of the abundant gold from which these ancient hidden treasures were made. The spirit of bold adventure characterized the enterprise, and glowing visions of gleaming gold would have induced any number to have joined the expedition. But numbers were not wanted. Two pioneer Californians entered upon the matter as an individual enterprise. Associating with them two men also skilled in gold-hunting, they bought the Nautilus, newly rigged her, manned her, provisioned her, and started upon their sea-voyage in search of a new Eldorado. The secrecy of the preliminary preparations, the taciturnity of their crew, and personal equipments of revolvers and bowie-knives, led at first to the suspicion that they were fillibusters bound on some illegal mission; but proper explanations to the United States Marshal dissipated these wrongful surmises, and they pushed to sea without hindrance, and with sails fully set before a spanking breeze. Nearly two months of the time that has intervened since the vessel departed this port, has been spent by the explorers amid the mountains, [illegible] and streamlets of Chiriqui, hunting gold-[illegible]. Two of the exploring party are now in this City, having come back a few days ago to get other to join them, and to obtain a supply of proper machinery and other things requisite to enter successfully upon mining operations in the new and rich gold-diggings which they claim to have found. We give below a narrative of the experiences thus far of the explorers, as told from their own lips. Aside from the deep interest attaching to the expedition, from its having for its object the discovery of a new gold region, the narrative is full of thrilling interest from the many "moving accidents by flood and field" experienced by the adventurers, and descriptions given of the inhabitants, products and scenery of a territory, portions of which are as little known to the civilized world as the neighboring region about Yucatan and Vera Paz, in Central Almerica.

Before entering upon our proposed narrative, we will briefly describe the explorers. As stated above, they are four in number. Their names are Wm. Hance, Charles G. B. Coffin, Dr. Henry Ball and Samuel Gentner. Mr. Hance, the oldest of the party, and chosen leader, is a rough, stern-looking man, nearly sixty years of age, and with rich endowment of health, courage, hair, whiskers, moustache, and high-topped boots. His passion for adventure is intense. On the breaking out of the California gold-fever in 1849, he was foremost on the ground. He dug the famous sixty-five-pound nugget—the largest nugget ever found in California—worth $30,000—which was exhibited at a Bank in Wall-street, and caused a terrific rush of sordid ticket-buyers to the California steamship offices. Australia, Frazer River and Kikola Peak he has visited in turn, and now a new sphere of activity has opened for his restless energies. His past life gives proof that not so much sordid love of gain impelled him to the present enterprise, as the excitement and expansive character of the undertaking, giving daring and largeness to thought. Mr. Coffin, who with Mr. Hance planned the expedition, was also among the earliest arrivals in California. He there dug himself a splendid fortune, and most of the time since has been a traveling gentleman of elegant leisure, having traversed nearly every part of the habitable globe. The refining influences of his enlarged travels are apparent in his manner, and his conversation evinces one sharply observant of men and things. Although past middle age, he looks much younger, his youthful appearance being enhanced by an almost total absence of beard, except a dim and shadowy moustache, which he incessantly strokes with sedulous, nursing care. His seeming youth and delicate form give an impression of effeminacy and weak nerves, but through his dark, [illegible] eyes gleams consciousness of an independent [illegible] and the purpose and will of one equally at home in the extremes of luxury and depravation or scorn bodily comfort. Dr. Ball, like Mr. Coffin, is a Bayard Taylor sort of man, his proclivity being to climb unclimbed acclivities, to sea unseen seas, and warm his feet in the craters of volcanoes, where mortal feet never trod before. He is the Dr. Ball, who undertook on his own hook to traverse the summits of the White Mountains, who got lost in the attempt, and who, after being missing several days, was given up for starved or frozen to death, both of which came near being his fate. He has been a successful gold digger. His self-reliance, self-resource, industry and persistence, make him an invaluable companion. Mr. Gentner is in the prime of life, possessed of a form like Hercules, and the vivacity of Boccaccio. Nobody could possibly be better constituted by nature than he to join such an expedition. Bristle of hope and will, he is the soul of the party. By profession he is an engineer, and formerly was employed on the steamer Augusta.

The Nautilus, having Messrs. Hance, Coffin, Ball and Gentner as passengers, Capt. Woodruff as Commander, and a crew of five persons, left New-York on the 25th of last August. With the breezes from the southward and pleasant weather, she glided rapidly on her journey until the twentieth day out, when a gale arose, which soon blew with a furiousness seldom experienced except in rounding one of the Southern Capes. For two days the storm continued without a change, and there was momentary expectation that the vessel, the exploring party and crew would be plunged forever into the depths of ocean. Enormous seas broke over the ship, the stern spars were washed overboard, the railings were swept away and the ship completely dismasted. One of the sailors, the oldest and best of the crew, was blown from the rigging in the night, and for a moment his shrill voice was heard above the uproarious tumult of the lashing sea. It was useless to attempt to save him, and the attempt was not made. The explorers turned sailors—sailor sea-voyagers make them quite apt seamen—and for forty-eight hours they stood in the drenching rain without changing their clothing, and taking scarcely a mouthful to eat. The buoyancy of the vessel fortunately enables her to weather the storm. It was off the cheerless coast of the Mosquito Kingdom that the storm was encountered, and no sheltered anchorage presenting itself as a place of safety, she was of course had to be kept in the open sea. The storm having subsided, the ship stood for the Zapatilla Keys, off the Boca del Tigré Channel, on the coast of Chiriqui. The Boca del Tigré harbor was made on the afternoon of the 18th of September, the wind blowing moderately from the westward, and the sun shining brightly. In a mood of happy hopefulness, the explorers looked toward the promontories in the distance, with their peaks reaching majestically into the blue sky—the scene of their future labors and expected triumphal success. The harbor is wide, with sufficient depth of water for large vessels to ride in safety. The encompassing land forms a gentle, descending slope, and is covered with a luxuriant growth of stately trees, extending close to the water's edge. On either side stretch into view extended reefs and bluffs, while shutting out the view of the ocean are numerous islands and headlands, the latter natural breakwaters to the harbor, and together forming a scenic picture of the ancient Hesperides. Over the islands and mainland hovered multitudes of birds of the richest plumage, and along the swell of the sea, which from the effects of the late storm still broke tumultuously upon the extended reefs, skimmed in erratic freedom wild sea fowls. In the deeper water a crowd of huge porpoises kept up a lively disporting. Notwithstanding the unrivaled nature of the Boca del Tigré harbor, it is rarely that vessels drop anchor there. Seeing the Nautilus working her way to the inner shore, a crowd of natives thronged toward the beach. Timidly keeping in the distance, they with suspicious eyes watched the vessel and every movement of those on board, at the same time looking wistfully at their lithe canoes tied by strips of bark to the mango trees.

The Nautilus lay to all night. On the morning of the 19th September, the explorers stepped foot upon the shores of Chiriqui. The natives ran like wild men at their approach. Mr. Coffin immediately suspended a large gold cross about his neck. The effect was instantaneous—magical. Dropping on their knees before the revered symbol, they waited the approach of the strangers. Mr. Hance explained the object of their mission, when the majority tendered them a cordial welcome. The explorers were not surprised to learn, as they had already anticipated as much, that they had been taken for a party of fillibusters in the service of Gen. Walker, and that to this supposition was owing the precipitate flight following their landing. A good many of the natives, they were told, impressed with the same belief, fled inland on the evening previous, driving their cattle with them. In making known the fact that they had come thither on a gold-hunting tour, the explorers were sagaciously explicit upon the point, that they did not intend to disturb the hucas, for by this explicit statement, and the gold cross as an auxiliary, they knew they would avoid exciting the ill-feeling of the natives, who still protest against the disturbance of the hucas as a sacrilegious violation of the sacred graves of their ancestral chiefs—a protest so strenuously urged a few years ago, as to compel the issue of a proclamation forbidding any disturbance of the hucas by natives or foreigners, under severe penalty. A dead letter the proclamation now is, but the opposition is not entirely dead, although too weak to resist the stronger current, devotion to gold in the long run proving more potent and general than devotion to ancestral ashes. Having smoothed their way into the good graces of the opponents to grave-digging, and effected thereby avoidance of future manifold annoying hindrances, which this sire-revering faction are sure to visit upon grave-digging invaders, the explorers turned their attention to the selection of competent guides. This proved no easy matter. Any quantity stood ready to act, and all presenting similar pedal and muscular recommendations. At length, after a good deal of talk, and troublesome negotiation—the natives, grave-diggers, and anti-grave-diggers, being all endowed with as high appreciation of their services and good pay as municipal office-holders in New-York—two guides were selected. An old Indian trail, commencing at the mouth of Frenchman's Creek, was declared by the guides to be the best route to the mountains, Frenchman's Creek was five miles further up the coast.

Capt. Woodruff was instructed to keep the Nautilus at her anchorage in the Boca del Tigré harbor, awaiting the return of the explorers. Providing themselves with their prospecting implements, a tent-cloth, changes of clothing, ammunition for their revolvers, provisions, well-filled liquor flagons, tobacco, pipes and matches, and adding one of the ship's crew to their number, the party now set out on their proposed prospecting pilgrimage. All were in splendid spirits and the day was exquisitely fine, with nothing to mar the prospect of continued pleasant weather except a faint cloud-streak to the north. Every one started forth exulting in the pleasing expectation of an easy and expeditious journey. Arrived at Frenchman's Creek, a point quickly reached, the Indian trail was entered upon. All the sylvan lore in the world to one uninitiated in forest explorations, would have failed to distinguish the trail from any random route that might have been taken, so closely intertwined was the undergrowing shrubbery and frequent obstructions of decaying logs and newly-prostrated trees. The guides, with the sharp eyes of olden Pequots or Onondagas, were unerring in the route, however, and struck the Rabello River at precisely the point previously indicated. Having reached the river, it was advised to build a raft, and try water navigation as the quickest and pleasantest mode of transit for the next ten miles—the total distance thus far traveled being eighteen miles—and then take up the trail again. The proposition found cheerful seconds. A few dexterous blows from an axe, and slight expenditure of talent in constructing and tying withes, and a water craft, pronounced competent for the emergency, was ready for launching. Tiring to the arms and patience, however, was poleing up the river, owing to the complex winding of the stream, its shallowness and muddy bed. The scenery was in the highest degree picturesque, but the low and stout branches of the mangroves, shooting to the middle of the river from either side, and compelling a perpetual sharp dodging of heads to save necks, did not permit any extended enjoyment of the scenic beauty. After a forward movement of some five miles through the river's tortuous windings, and as many hours of tortuous poleing and head movement, it was deemed advisable to lay by, pitch the tent, and call it a day's work. An olden experience was tent-life. The fire, supper, pipes, discussing plans, jokes, and refreshing slumber followed in proper sequence, and with hearty appreciation.

Following the further windings of the Rabello River, and dodging the mangrove branches, was renewed in the morning and made the forenoon's entertainment. At noon the Indian trail was resumed. After three hours' tugging through thickets and brambles there was a sudden halt. One of the guides had been bitten by a snake—the venomous crotalus. On the inner ancle of his right foot were two marks of the reptile's fangs. Mr. Gentner instantly sucked the wounds with his mouth, and Dr. Ball applied caustics. These prompt remedies saved the man's life, but for five days he was a horrid object to look upon—the bitten leg swelling to double its natural size, his skin a deep livid hue, and his eyes rolling fearfully in their crimsoned sockets. A delay of a week followed this untoward calamity. This was provoking, and the setting in of the rainy season made it more so. The climax of provocation was yet to be attained. The two guides deserted. Here was a fix—an almost parallel predicament to that of the aeronaut Thurston in the dense Canadian wilderness. What was to be done? The only thing that could be done was to work their way back to the Atlantic coast and make a new start. The attempt was made. It took just eleven days to accomplish the retrograde journey. Who shall describe those eleven days' experiences? There was no missing the way, for they did not know any way to miss. The constant sombre clouds and falling rain made the dense woods a thickening darkness. The matches got water-soaked and ruined, preventing the building of fires, and making ten-fold more dismal the long nights, and louder and deeper the wailings of the wind. Pluck, however, was not exhausted, but only a little dampened. Though suffering greatly, they bore all spiritedly, till good luck brought them again, fresh and buoyant as ever, on board the Nautilus.

A snug and sheltered inlet bordering the hacienda of a Mr. Chriwiry, at a point ten miles up the coast, the Nautilus now headed for. Thence the explorers immediately made their second attempt to reach the mountains. This time the attempt was successful, but not without its difficulties and perils. Securing two guides who proved to be trusty, another Indian trail was pursued. In following the latter trail the Guarano River was crossed sixteen times in two days. The river bed and some minor tributary streams were prospected, but no gold indications discovered. In the tangled wilderness were met occasional tokens of olden civilization and strange physical changes, such as ruined archways, marine shells, and tide marks. Once in a while the case hut of some native would rise to view—a native who never before had seen the face of white man—who yet spoke an Indian dialect, and who looked as wonderingly on the watches, jewelry and clothing of their strange visitors, as would the unvisited inhabitants of any of the Galapagos group of islands. Around these huts were patches of luxuriant sugar cane, bananas, pineapple and plantain trees. Nearing the mountain passes, game became abundant. The mountain deer, the tayucha or wild sow, and the wara or wild hog, fled in droves through the retreats, and on the rich slopes flitted wild turkeys, quails and partridges. Birds of Paradise abound, and are much larger than those of India. Monkeys chattered from the tree-tops.

For miles along the mountains the explorers prospected for gold. They claim to have hit upon better diggings than were ever found in California, but the localities they refuse to specify. In clambering about the mountains they several times narrowly escaped tumbling over precipices. The ascent of Mount Sarah, the highest of the Cordilleras range in that vicinity, came near costing Dr. Ball his life. A rock upon which he was standing suddenly gave way, and he went tumbling two hundred feet down a declivity, before he could catch hold of anything that would support his weight. Had he fallen a few rods further, he would have reached the edge of a precipice several hundred feet high, beyond which there would not have been any possible earthly salvation for him. The view from the top of Mount Sarah, Mr. Coffin, who has ascended Mount Blanc and stood on the top of Mount Rhigi, declares to be as fine as the finest Switzerland views. Securing abundant samples of their gold diggings, both dust and quartz, and marking privately the placers to be worked in future, the explorers turned their backs upon the auriferous mountains. These samples have been sent on to Washington since Messrs. Coffin and Gentner's return to this City, for the inspection of President Buchanan and Secretary Floyd. The section they canvassed, they assert, has never been explored before. Its distance from Gomez and Rugebita, where the hucas are principally located, has precluded the hypothesis that the original gold was excavated so far away.

On their return, the explorers took a roundabout course, for the purpose of seeing more of the country, visiting the huaca diggings and additional prospecting. They made stops at Caldero, Dolago, David, and Boca del Toro. At David they were entertained by the Governor of Chiriqui in generous and handsome style. They met there Mr. Pierson, agent of the Pacific Mail Company, and Mr. Johnson, who cut down the first tree on the Panama road. Mr. Thompson, of the Panama road, was also there. Mr. Pierson was once with Kit Carson, and knew John Brown in Kansas. At Boca del Toro they fell in with Mr. Peter Sheppard, son of the original Peter Sheppard, who received the large grant of land bordering the upper coast of Costa from the King of the Mosquito Kingdom. Young, tall, and swarthy, like a Creole, he was a leading jolly bachelor existence, attending to his ship-yard and extended hacienda, the latter in a fine state of cultivation. Intelligent and appreciative, he set before them the best of liquors and segars, and gave them a ride in a canoe, just received as a present from the Mosquito King, who has held the reins of government over the Mosquito Kingdom since the elder Sheppard's death. The canoe was thirty-five feet long, seven feet broad, and hewed out of a solid cedar log.

Part of their journey was by the new Chiriqui road, as it is called, through which it was difficult to procure guides to pilot them, on account of the superstition of the natives, who believe it fatal to pass over the road. They visited the huaca diggings at the Boquet. They saw some earthen-ware taken out the graves, but no gold. As the rainy season was still on, the digging was pursued, however, to great disadvantage. Some Americans from Panama, a few Frenchmen, and about a score of Germans, were there, but the net exhibit of their labors held out no inducement for tarrying. More satisfied than ever that the huacas afforded but poor pickings, they thence proceeded directly for the Nautilus, which, meantime, had been taken to Boca del Toro for repairs.

The route from the Boquet lay through a most charming section of the country, through grand forests abounding in every variety of live oak, superb mahogany trees, rosewood, satinwood and tall cedars; through immense orange, lemon, banana, plantain and pineapple groves, and here and there extended prairies dotted with waving corn, cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees. Having little else to do, they indulged in game-shooting by the way, and collected samples of bituminous coal from native beds, claimed to be equal to Liverpool cannel; a species of silk grass, said to be longer, stouter, and superior to the Manila for rope-manufacturing; wild potatoes, alleged to be as large and as good eating as cultivated Jerseys, and huge balls of wild cotton picked from trees of the size of apple-trees, and declared to be equal to the cotton productions of South Carolina. On the 9th of November the explorers were on board the Nautilus again. Leaving Mr. Hance and Dr. Ball at Boca del Toro, the Nautilus took Messrs. Coffin and Gentner to Aspinwall, from which place the latter took the earliest passage by steamer to this city. Altogether, the explorers were in Chiriqui seven weeks and two days, most of the time experiencing rainy weather, and sleeping under a tent. Notwithstanding the drawbacks to comfort incidental to gold prospecting and camp life in wet weather, they had, according to the story of Mr. Coffin and Mr. Gentner, a "jolly good time." The story as given above speaks for itself. Although crowded into one-third the space it might be made to fill, and omitting necessarily much of a spicy and readable character, nothing essential has been omitted beyond what can readily be guessed at. Mr. Coffin and Mr. Gentner expect to return to Chiriqui in a few days, after securing the needed mechanical appliances for extended mining. They join their associates at Boca del Toro, and thence hurry to their marked places among the mountains. They say they have discovered a second California, and no doubt they have. Their own return enhances, of course, the credibility of their statements. Their sanguine expectations as to the final pecuniary result, however doubtingly regarded now by the reader, cannot long remain in uncertainty in this age of quick travel, fast dissemination of news, and eager watching for splendid speculations.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

Ten years ago the very name of a "Christmas book" was a disgust to all true lovers of literature. It implied then a strange sort of typographical monster, sprung from the ashes of the decayed Annual; a thing of golden shreds and purple patches, made up to catch the eye alone, without one second thought bestowed upon the heart and brain, which other books appeal to, and in which true authors make their abiding-place. Such productions fell emphatically into Charles Lamb's Parish caste of "books that are no books,"—even more emphatically, indeed, than the London Annuals to which they had succeeded. For the older-fashioned Annuals drew into themselves something of the real literature of their day. The crimson, silken covers of the Keepsake; the gilded morocco of the Friendship's Offering and the Book of Beauty, closed upon graceful verses from gifted pens, and delicate fancies from pencils grown now immortal. Byron and Scott, Coleridge and Wordsworth disdained them not, nor Stanfield and Eitt and Wilkie. They exhaled, indeed, an overpowering odor of the soft Belgravian boudoirs, but they were far from being utterly unworthy the best company which they kept. They were fops of books, but by no means empty fops. In a word, they were in literature very much what men like D'Orsay were in life. Their successors were of a lower strain. These were fellows who carried all their fortunes on their backs: poor creatures, burnished and gilded into a drawing-room presentability, but intrinsically dull, stupid, insignificant—a company of sumptuous twaddlers. All this we have changed. Within the last three or four years, the Christmas book has been rising with tremendous rapidity in the social scale. In the place of Beauties of the Koran, or Courts of Genghis-Khan, we are beginning now to have exquisite editions of sterling works—"things of beauty" to the mind as well as to the sight; and the "gift-books" which hem our publishers' and booksellers' shelves to-day are, for the most part, books which are gifts indeed—books which no man need be ashamed to have given, and no man (we use the word generically, and not sexually) ashamed or angry to have received. The development of a genuine artistic taste, in the English and American public, which is thus indicated, deserves at least a passing word of attention from every conscientious critic who holds it part of his vocation to mark and aid the general upward movement of the popular mind.

The number of really beautiful and attractive books which the present season has brought forward is less striking than their almost uniform advance in the great essentials of true artistic beauty and attractiveness over the books of previous years. We have nothing indeed so thoroughly characteristic, nothing which challenges such a specific place for itself in praise or blame, as the Illustrated Tennyson of a year ago; but we have mere and better illustrated books from American houses than have ever before graced a single Christmas-tide. We have already spoken of several of these books, as for instance, the reproduction of Kaulbach's admirable etchings, with Goethe's poem of Reynard the Fox, and the Appletons' new collection of "Favorite Ballads," in which an over-weight of Mackay and the like tinplate-workers in verse is redeemed by, so many true and exquisite poems.

From Philadelphia Messrs. E. H. Butler & Co. have followed up their last year's volume of Distinguished Poets with a stately and splendid volume, entitled a Gallery of English and American Female Poets. This collection, which brings together the "sweet utterances" of a fair company of lady minstrels, from Mrs. Hemans and Miss Hannah More to Miss Alice Carey and Miss Hannah Gould, has been made with great apparent catholicity of taste, and it is adorned with engravings often more than worthy of the text which they accompany. Leutze, Reade, Huntington, Hicks, have all been laid under contribution by the American muse; Turner and Landseer do homage to her English sister; and the burin has been loyal to the pencil. Landseer contributes his portrait of Mrs. Norton, (a trifle wild as a likeness, and very wildly engraved, be it noted,) and Hicks his most accurate and speaking portrait of Margaret Fuller. The bibliopolist can hardly quarrel with the binding up of this casket, in point either of solidity or subdued richness of appearance.

Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., among their other treasures, offer us "The Most Excellent Historie of the Merchant of Venice, written by William Shakespeare."

"To wit, beside commends and courteous breath gifts of rich value." With Shakespeare in his most real and incomparable comedy—and the artists, paper makers, printers and binders, at their holiday best, even the friends of John Bunyan—those wise fellows who said "Not so"—might heartily approve "this book."

The "Merchant of Venice," on the stage always vexatious from its faults of construction, is especially a closet-comedy for "them of rich leisure." It possesses a high tragic interest which the reader entirely enjoys, contemplating its whole progress with the most comfortable satisfaction; for when those with whom the reader sympathizes are in their day of danger, they sustain themselves with so noble a tone of honorable friendship that it would be scarcely possible to regret what brings it out, and then the trouble is too brief to excite a positive pain; while the subsequent tribulation of the Jew is personally gratifying to all. This play is also the play of plays for lavish poetic expression. It is full of fine lines, wherein one may "get glimpses that will make him less forlorn" of noble thought and generous feelings, often a quaint and dainty idealism, and oftener still, the most delicate wit—the very swans-down feather of sportive fancy.

The present edition is illustrated with twenty very fine engravings on wood, and numerous curious little head and tail pieces. Five of the large illustrations are drawn by Birket Foster, the great English master of this style of art that is fast growing into the dimensions of a "School." There is great vivacity and movement in the drawing entitled "St. Mark's-place," and this is the more notable as it is in a style in which we very seldom see a success; but the very finest of all these fine drawings is that of "The Garden," in the second act. Here the artist has caught the most insubstantial spirit of "the pageant"—the lazy poplars sleep and dream—the lady's dress rustles in the breeze, and the breeze itself rises and falls in the spraying sparkle of the fountain; a quiet haze of moonlit languor drowses over the whole scene. Altogether, in composition, tone, expression, this drawing is a chef d'œuvre.

It is sufficient to say that the form of the book is worthy of its spirit. It is printed on heavy tinted paper, and the binding is of the richest kind.

Not altogether a "beauty book" is Mr. Ehninger's collection of Autograph Etchings by American Artists. This collection, published by W. A. Townsend & Co., of this city, contains twelve original etchings, by as many different American artists, each one intended or supposed to illustrate a verse or versicle from one of our more or less popular poets. Durand opens the gallery with a somewhat hasty sketch of what is averred to be a shady pool, hidden beneath the sceptre of what is decidedly not "a blue-budded ash." Kensett, Leutze, Darley, Eastman Johnson, Casilear, Gifford, Dana, (whose clever sketches of French coast scenery we have noticed at several of our later Academy exhibitions,) Mignot and Ehninger follow, with drawings of varied merit. The decided interest of the collection lies in the peculiar photographic process by which, as Mr. Ehninger expresses it, "the artist in the act of drawing literally engraves his own design." This process, under the exacter name of photoglyphy, has been developed and applied in Great Britain, but Mr. Ehninger's series of autographic etchings is a virtual introduction of the whole subject to our own public. It has therefore an extrinsic value which should commend his book to all interested in the progress of the economy of art. Some of the drawings, as, for instance, Johnson's "Wigwam," have a singularly picturesque charm of their own. The face of the squaw in this drawing is worthy of the artist of the "Old Kentucky Home," now become so familiar to the public through Mr. George Ward Nichols' excellent photographic reproduction of that very remarkable picture.

Boston, represented by the Moxonian house of Ticknor & Fields, is, of course, not behind-hand in this race of bibliopoles. Foremost among the contributions of this house let us place their illustrated edition of that most worthy and honorable book, Tom Brown's School-Days at Rugby. With the best imaginable will and more or less felicity of pencil, Mr. L. G. Mead has outlined the masculine humanities of Tom Brown's healthy and honest genius. For old and young alike no better, wiser and more noble gift need be asked or offered than so fair a copy of so fair a book. Fit companion of its high modern chivalry is the gracious soul of Sir Philip Sidney, embalmed in a singularly refined and tasteful volume of illuminated typography, by the Messrs. Burnham, also of Boston. This, which hardly comes perhaps, under the head of "illustrated literature," is yet a "Christmas book" of the best stamp, since it carries in itself the whole beauty of Christian manhood, set forth in the fancies and the feelings of the true gentleman whom old Gabriel Harvey baptized the "Secretary of eloquence." The body of the book does no discredit to its spirit, which is to say for it all that can be said, and mark it as "apples of gold in pictures of silver," once more rousing himself to speech, and "shoots

As much may be said for the goodly array of poets in blue and gold whom Ticknor & Fields, of Boston, and C. S. Francis & Co., of this City, have been arranging so carefully for the last twelve-month. Mr. Francis accompanies his varied editions of Mrs. Brownrigg's Poems with a photographic portrait of the authoress, which of itself would make a pleasant little gift.

Shall we call Mr. Kenneth Mackenzie's careful reproduction of that quaint old satire, The Omniana, which has been issued by Messrs. Thomas & Fields in a holiday suit of good enlightened sense, a Christmas book? Thanks to the delicately-tinted paper, the clear, pure type, and Alfred Crowquill's comical pencil, it is certainly pleasant enough to the eye, while the substance of the book is apt like at Christmas and Midsummer. Till that millennial day shall dawn on which all the fools are to die, this old German "mirror of asses" may be as profitably used by modern Americans as by mediæval Teutons. Till Eulenspiegel makes a very natural link for us between the Christmas books of the larger and those of the lesser children, but we fairly recoil from the task of marshaling and inspecting the absolute regiment of "little people's books" which is assembled here before us. In a general way we may say of them, that their numbers have increased immensely, without deteriorating their quality; indeed, so far as we have been able to glance through them, we have been struck with a decided general improvement in the moral tone of books of this class. The vapid Poor-Richardism and good-boys-with-plum-cake-rewarded philosophy, which threatened to supersede the healthy, imaginative story-telling of forty years since, are decidedly disappearing. We are getting back to facts and fun, which, wisely administered, make the best possible food for young minds. Still, as nothing should be more a matter of conscientious criticism than the books one recommends for the use of children, we can speak only of the few of these new productions on which we have been able to make up a judgment. Mayne Reid, through Messrs. Ticknor & Fields, sends the boys another of his hearty books of travel and adventure, under the name of the Boy Tar, full of sea and shore, and of a sincere feeling for nature. From the same publishers, too, we have a certain Annual for Boys, by Mr. H. C. Kingsford, which strikes us favorably; and a sketch of the Crusades and Crusaders, by Mr. Edgar, which has been carefully prepared, and barring a little hazardous preachiness, may be safely spoken of. The Little Commodore, too, published by Shelton & Co., is a wholesome, pleasant book, evidently from the pen of a lady, which describes the first voyage of a lad with his father, a naval captain, to the Mediterranean, Spain, Gibraltar, Syria, and the Pyramids, with an attractive ease and vivacity of style. Mr. Abbott launches two or three more of his well-known packet-line of boys' books. Miss Alice Seymour's pleasant sketches of Christmas at Glenwood, and Easter at Glenwood, deserve attention; and a pretty tale of a Gray African Parrot speaks for itself, like Miss Edgeworth's stories, by its very title. Our readers will see, then, that if they cannot find what they seek in the way of intellectual gifts for their friends and families, the fault must be charged to the "embarrassment of wealth," rather than to the indifference of the public purveyors.

Incidents for Christmas.

SCENES IN THE DAILY LIFE OF YOUNG NEW-YORK.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Comparatively few of your readers can know anything of the great life of poverty underneath the surface of society in this City. It is difficult to imagine that there are so many hundreds and thousands who rise up in the morning and know not where they shall sleep at night, or where they shall get their bread for the day.

It is hardest of all to think of a child, homeless, in a whole city full.

Let any one of your readers fancy one of the bright-eyed little fellows at his own table, or the sweet little girls that make the house merry to him, really living on the street, wandering about and begging bread at rich men's doors, laying the weary young head on straw, in some open box, shivering in wintry storms, and bedraggled and muddy, and wet and hungry—then he would appreciate what so many little sufferings go through with in New-York.

Our office is thronged now with homeless and needy children, begging for food, or clothes, or work. But it is not alone poverty that drives them to seek a home in our Society. Many of them are really anxious to do better in life. Sometimes parents, too poor to support them, bring them to us, fearing the dangers of the street. A good instance of this occurred lately. A remarkably bright, intelligent little fellow was sent by the Society to the West. He seemed much superior to the usual class of street boys, and the employer, not understanding why his mother should have sent him to the country, wrote to ask her what inducements had been applied to her to gain her consent. She answered that the inducements were a half a dozen words she had heard from the lad. In speaking of three of his intimate companions, he had said that one had already been sent to the House of Refuge, another to the Penitentiary, and another to Sing Sing. This was warning enough to her. She hastened to the office with the boy. How many lads who would have been thieves, or burglars, or vagrants in the City, have thus been started on new courses!

We have now been at work nearly seven years, and we can begin to see the permanent effects of our system. During this Winter, a street boy who was sent out by us six years ago, has returned to visit us. He is now a respectable young man, member of the Methodist Church, having a little property of his own, and he desired to take a homeless boy from the office to bring up for an industrious life, even as he himself had been aided by others.

We hear from some others of the boys who are teachers, others farmers, others manufacturing workmen, telegraph operators, and in every sort of useful and active business. They are generally absorbed into the country communities, so that no one knows that they ever came from a charitable society.

Many of the girls are married, and settled in respectable situations in life.

Perhaps many of your young readers, in these happy Christmas days, as they gather about the bright firesides, and enjoy the good things from so many kind hands, would like to feel that they were making a merry Christmas for some little hungry and houseless child, and would give the best of all gifts at this season, the money which will send him to a good home. Surely the Christmas meal would be happier, to think that the hungry and deserted were having a brighter day for their little gifts. How many, perhaps, would like to give clothes, or bedding, or food—even old garments would make many comfortable in this cold season.

To show what is really the need among this class, I add one simple sketches, taken from our journal of the children who come in such numbers to our office. They are not different from hundreds we have on our books, and we give them almost in the language in which they told their own stories.

Who that is fortunate will be willing to reach out a hand to these little unfortunate ones?

THE LITTLE ENGLISH ORPHAN.

May 11, 1859.—A little good-humored boy, very frank and prepossessing in his manner, presented himself to-day at the office to ask for a home in the country. William is an orphan boy. Was born in London. Father died in England, and mother in America about nine months ago. She had been a good mother, for she had never put a step-father over him. Stayed all round every where he could; had often no place to stay in. Sometimes slept outside a saloon near the Bowery on straw. The rain sometimes came down and wetted him. Other boys used to sleep with him on the straw. They had another companion, a little black dog, that used to sleep near the wall. He did not care to go round like the boys to hunt up "his grub," so the little dog died of starvation, for he couldn't be got to move out of the best of straw. Willy went round to "make money." Sometimes sold wood, sometimes sold the Express, sometimes but not often, blacked boots. Worked on a farm for a short time, and was sent to be very tender. Used to milk the cow and drive her out to pasture. He heard at last of the Newsboys' Lodging-house, and came in their way. He heard some of the newsboys talking in the streets about the Lodging-house. He followed one of them, and asked Mr. O'Connor if he could stay, and this having been given, he hurried to the supper of bread and coffee. The boy [illegible] and short; he wears an old blue jacket [illegible] of his sleeves, and pants which [illegible] low his knees.

He was sent to a good home in the West, with Mr. O'Connor.

A DESERTED BOY.

Nov. 29.—Simon O'B., is a Dutchman, about 14 years of age. Father died about four months ago. Boy took to working after father died, but was unable to get along. Simon was always too small to work anything, so sometimes he stayed at home, and sometimes he stayed at home, and sometimes he went to school. Mother thought he could get along better if she should have married again, so she entertained a strange man [illegible] life, what does she do, but leave her poor child [illegible] and travel, and made herself scarce. Poor Simon was left all alone. He was sent to the Newsboys' Lodging-house, and [illegible] positive manner, to get [illegible] neighbors she wouldn't be [illegible] sold out her furniture before [illegible] clothes with the gentleman to whom [illegible] Simon was sure she had no natural affection, [illegible] didn't care much about me, neighbors,' said he.

When he found that mother had deserted him [illegible] certainly, he was quite prepossessed [illegible] York; he was hungry and [illegible] place, but one of them is [illegible] station-house for lodging, and [illegible] he went over to Brooklyn, and got work [illegible] house, but having no shoes, the [illegible] feet; he left, after the third night, came [illegible] York the day before yesterday, and found [illegible] Newsboys' Lodging-house. [illegible] shock shirt and pair of dirty pants [illegible] face is browned by the weather; he has [illegible]

A LITTLE SEEKER.

Oct. 12, 1859.—Daniel O'B., a quiet [illegible] eyed boy, about 12 years of age, [illegible] office this afternoon by a [illegible] man and who found his way hither [illegible] Daniel's face is sharp and [illegible] is innocent. The following is his story [illegible] words:

"I was born in Henry-street. [illegible] died a year and three months ago, and [illegible] three months dead. Father married [illegible] and poor mother, after his death, tried to work [illegible] machine to support me. My brothers [illegible] Jack, died before her. When she died [illegible] to live in. I slept about somewhere [illegible] often thought of my mother when I [illegible] sort of places; but so often of my father [illegible] cleared me out. The way of it was, [illegible] to keep me of school; father [illegible] something to get money, and turned me out [illegible] spite of mother. Then I went about [illegible] and spent a good deal of my time round [illegible] ery Theatre; sometimes I used to [illegible] sleep everywhere. There is a place [illegible] Points called Cow Bay. I was brought there [illegible] one night by another boy. An [illegible] it to be. We slept in a little alley [illegible] I was wakened up often by [illegible] houses around. I slept there a good many times. [illegible] and bye I missed some of the boys from [illegible] couldn't tell what became of them. I [illegible] 'em got 'prisoned, and others went to [illegible] else. I went home to mother when [illegible] Soon after mother died, and then I was homeless again. I slept that night on a bench in [illegible] Don't know where I should sleep to-night if I didn't come here."

This little fellow was neatly dressed [illegible] and sent off to a country home.

He was sent to a home in the West. He has a good deal of natural intelligence, and we believe he will do well in his new home.

A LITTLE WANDERER.

Oct. 20, 1859.—Edward F——, a [illegible] boy 11 years old, was sent to the office from the Newsboys' Lodging-house. He lost his mother about six months ago. "When father was gone," said he, "I used to have my hard times. I remember once I went without anything to eat, and at nights I used to sleep in old wagons, under stoops and in cool [illegible] no bed for a long time. At first I thought this was hard, but by and by, when I got used to it, I didn't care or fret so much about it. I always [illegible] boys had places where they lay together, but I never found a place—a wagon or cool [illegible] Sometimes I made pennies by running errands for people, and then had a dinner or [illegible] times I worked for a woman as a [illegible] sometimes I got clothes from her. When mother was alive I used to go to school." This above little fellow wore an old dirty gray jacket, with the sleeves hanging from his elbows.

Little Eddie is now doing well with a Western farmer. C. L. B., No. 11 Clinton Hall, Astor-place.

Symptoms of Excitement at the South and at the North.

THREATENING ASPECT OF AFFAIRS.

REACTION IN VIRGINIA.

[illegible] OF VIRGINIA POLITICS.

Richmond, Va., Saturday, Dec. 17, 1859.

[illegible] to your readers to learn [illegible] in this City is now undergoing a [illegible] from the high pitch of excitement [illegible] ever since the Harper's Ferry outbreak. Our people are rapidly regaining [illegible] and we seldom see any [illegible] people in groups of fifteen or [illegible] in the street corners [illegible] the outgoing tide of the [illegible] Petersburg gave way to the [illegible] which pervaded all classes of our [illegible] to be heavenly hoped that the day is [illegible] people shall ever have a similar [illegible] their domestic tranquillity. The [illegible] which may be read in every eye is, [illegible] to-day in the future? Disunion, which [illegible] to us as something afar off, seems [illegible] a thing of yesterday.

[illegible] have all along looked for a return of reason and [illegible] on the part of the people in the Free [illegible] Slavery agitation. But it [illegible] we go the worse we fare, and [illegible] of our citizens despair has [illegible] I do not believe the people [illegible] are mindful of the [illegible] they are continually heap[illegible] devoted roads through the Press and [illegible] upon our institutions, which surely [illegible] them as much as they do. There [illegible] South has been [illegible] to act on the defensive [illegible] the aggression of the North. This [illegible] the question rests with the [illegible] hostility of the North towards [illegible] the work of fever-heat politicians [illegible]

[illegible] contend that the South has been [illegible] for this condition of affairs as [illegible] Hence, does this excitement [illegible] result of an unhealthy and mor[illegible] see no mode of remedying the [illegible] affairs, except by revolutionizing to [illegible] the politics of the country. This can [illegible] by bringing forward [illegible] the conservative elements of [illegible] of the Confederacy, through unmack[illegible] committee men, whose past career [illegible] The negro is not the only ques[illegible] the American people are inter[illegible] people are tired of this subject, and from [illegible] they pray for repose.

[illegible] it may appear, the farmers and mer[illegible] not [illegible] out of ten, believe [illegible] the Old Dominion can boast in [illegible] Secretary of War. I suppose [illegible] Floyd is not popular with the politicians [illegible] he will not talk nigger all the time. Floyd is a man of great force of character, and it is [illegible] to get him to straddle a hobby. He made [illegible] Governor, without noise or bluster, [illegible] popular with the people of this State. The ruling idea here at this time is non-intercourse with the North with our business relations; [illegible] that is, that our leading tobacco-[illegible] with firms in your City, and it [illegible] work awkwardly.

[illegible] the Petersburgh people are very par[illegible] New-York City. We like the old Knickerbocker [illegible] and we would be to us a sad hour when we should be compelled to sever our business relations with the people of New-York City. We have only to hope that this storm will soon be quieted, and that the people of the Old Dominion and the Empire State will stand shoulder to shoulder in the bonds of union and [illegible] now and thereafter, now and forever.

[illegible] Richmond correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, dated the 15th, says: "Governor Wise [illegible] to New-York and for the consummation of which [illegible] Mr. Reade says the Governor himself thus instructed, he went to New-York, but did not deal through Germany, as he had been advised, but revealed the matter to Gerritson Smith, and through the book-keeper of Hussey & Rand, carpet manufacturers, Worth-street, New-York; Mr. Boyden, lawyer; Theodore Sedgwick, W. F. McAuley, of Kansas, then on a visit to New-York, and the daughter of William Henry Burleigh. He then left for England, and often spoke of the matter in England and France, telling it, among others, to Mr. Vaney, Armstrong Cowell, at Havre. Having renounced Abolitionism, he sailed from France to New-Orleans, and from thence to Mobile in April last.

He says that as soon as he learned Brown's purposes, he renounced all notions of participation, and only acted with them because of his conviction that, having learned their plans, he could not have escaped, though the pledge of secrecy only extended to the forfeiture of the protection which the society afforded. Mr. Reade assures us that his renunciation of abolitionism is sincere, and that he has told his acquaintances here that should he remain out of the pulpit, he intended to make speeches, giving his notions of the horrors of abolitionism in the North, during the next Presidential election; and if not, then to publish letters. He assures us that he does know that Gerrit Smith sent money to Brown, the latter saying that Smith was cognizant of all his plans; that Dr. Howe and Theodore Parker, of Boston, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, of Worcester, and Hawkins, of Concord, were cognizant of his plans, and would sustain him with money. He says that Brown was a very secretive man and able leader. Mr. Reade mentions stopping in Cedar county, midway between Iowa City and Tipton, where he lectured on education and other subjects. He tells us that after leaving Cleveland for New-York, he never had further correspondence with any of the parties—this was in June, 1858. And when he returned to the United States he supposed the whole expedition had been broken up. He offers no defence or apology for the monstrous wickedness of the purposes of the association, but professes a sincere conviction of the great moral wrong.

We will add that we yesterday suggested to the friends of Mr. Reade the propriety of his placing himself unconditionally at the disposition of the President of the United States. We are glad to say that he has done so, and has also offered to surrender himself to Governor Wise, and has notified these authorities that he shall remain here until their wishes are known.

The New-Orleans Bulletin, in copying the above, says: "We have conversed with several gentlemen who knew Reade well while here, and they all believe him to be, now that his character is unveiled, the basest conspirator of old Brown's gang. He is extraordinarily gifted, both as a writer and speaker, and is a consummate hypocrite of the villainous Iago stamp. When we recall the rôle which he played here—his fanatic abhorrence of some of those trivial indulgencies incident to youth, the never-ceasing iteration of his filial love, his pious cant about little children, and the innumerable other traits that mark the snake-like sleekness of his disposition—we cannot but regard him as one of the most subtle foes the South could have in her midst. Brown and the others, true to their compact, made the desperate venture, but Reade, after having kept the oath of secrecy even while among the very people whose lives and property were threatened, now proclaims his complicity with the enormity of a bawd. In fact, as we learn from a letter from Austin, he is proud of his notoriety and regrets that his history was not known in that place before he lectured there, as then he would have had a much larger audience. To show the true character of the man, we may remark that within the short space of a few months he has renounced Protestantism and embraced Catholicity, and again returned to his first faith."

THE "HOWADJI" TO BE SUPPRESSED.

The Troy Whig says that during the services at the Session Room of the Sixth-street Presbyterian Church in that city, Wednesday evening, the Pastor, Mr. Durfee, stated that he wished to say a word upon a subject which he could not consistently present on the Sabbath day. It was well known that Mr. Curtis had been engaged to deliver a lecture before the Literary Association of that city, upon "Modern Infidelity"—in which he uttered the most rank infidelio sentiments. He thought such a lecture ought not to be delivered without a protest from this Church, even if no other Christian congregation would or dare join in it. If Mr. Curtis would not change his subject, or if the Association would not throw Mr. Curtis overboard, then that Society itself should be thrown overboard. He hoped the Church would take some action in the matter.

MINOR INDICATIONS OF SOUTHERN FEELING.

The South Carolina General Assembly has passed resolutions declaring it as its judgment that the Slaveholding States should immediately meet together to concert measures for united action; that the Governors of the several Southern States should be requested to appoint deputies to attend the Convention; that a special commission should be appointed to communicate the resolutions adopted to the State of Virginia, and to express the sympathy of South Carolina, and finally that the sum of $100,000 should be appropriated for military purposes to protect the citizens and their property from destruction in any emergency.

Information of this was sent to Mr. BotelER, the representative from that district, who immediately set the policemen and clerks to watch for the person who should call for such a letter, but no one appeared to claim it.

The citizens of Louisa County, Va., have resolved that the election of Wm. H. Seward, or of any member of the Black Republican Party, to the Presidency of the United States, ought to be immediately followed by the secession of all the Slaveholding States from this Confederacy, and the prevention of any organization of a Federal Administration under such a President.

In fact, as we learn from a letter from Austin, he is proud of his notoriety and regrets that his history was not known in that place before he lectured there, as then he would have had a much larger audience. To show the true character of the man, we may remark that within the short space of a few months he has renounced Protestantism and embraced Catholicity, and again returned to his first faith."

THE "HOWADJI" TO BE SUPPRESSED.

The Troy Whig says that during the services at the Session Room of the Sixth-street Presbyterian Church in that city, Wednesday evening, the Pastor, Mr. Durfee, stated that he wished to say a word upon a subject which he could not consistently present on the Sabbath day. It was well known that Mr. Curtis had been engaged to deliver a lecture before the Literary Association of that city, upon "Modern Infidelity"—in which he uttered the most rank infidelio sentiments. He thought such a lecture ought not to be delivered without a protest from this Church, even if no other Christian congregation would or dare join in it. If Mr. Curtis would not change his subject, or if the Association would not throw Mr. Curtis overboard, then that Society itself should be thrown overboard. He hoped the Church would take some action in the matter.

The South Carolina General Assembly has passed resolutions declaring it as its judgment that the Slaveholding States should immediately meet together to concert measures for united action; that the Governors of the several Southern States should be requested to appoint deputies to attend the Convention; that a special commission should be appointed to communicate the resolutions adopted to the State of Virginia, and to express the sympathy of South Carolina, and finally that the sum of $100,000 should be appropriated for military purposes to protect the citizens and their property from destruction in any emergency.

Judge Crain, of Circuit Court of Charles county Md., has issued an order, which has been concurred in by the Grand Jury of the county, for withdrawing all licenses granting to free negroes the use of firearms; and also authorizing the Sheriff and Constables to search for and seize upon such arms wherever found, and dispose of the same according to law. The order was issued under Acts of Assembly of 1831, chap. 323; of 1806, chap. 71, and of 1715, chap. 44.

Thirteen negroes, seven adults and six children, passed through Pittsburgh, Penn., on the 14th, en route from Petersburgh, Va., to Portsmouth, Ohio. They were recently manumitted by their owners. The male adults were freed some time ago, but remained until they secured the freedom of their families. They say that sixty-nine more liberated bondmen are to come from the same locality about Christmas.

The bill for excluding free negroes from the State of Mississippi, passed the House on the 7th Dec. by a vote of 75 to 5. It provides that they shall leave the State on or before the 1st of July, 1860; or if they prefer to remain, that they shall be sold into Slavery with a right of choice of masters at a price assessed by three disinterested slaveholders, the proceeds to go into the treasury of the county in which the provisions of the bill may require to be executed.

A workman on the new State House in Columbia, S. C., was escorted out of the city by the Marshals for expressing incendiary language on the subject of Slavery. Upon his reaching the Charlotte junction of the city he was met by the Vigilance Committee, who stripped him to the waist and inflicted twenty-nine lashes and a coat of tar and feathers. When he arrived in Charleston he related his experience and made light of the whole affair, excepting the twenty-nine lashes.

Some days since Mr. Avis, the jailor at Charlestown, Va., received a letter offering him a large sum to favor the escape of Cook and Coppin, and requesting an answer to be sent to Washington. Information of this was sent to Mr. Botelier, the representative from that district, who immediately set the policemen and clerks to watch for the person who should call for such a letter, but no one appeared to claim it.

The citizens of Louisa County, Va., have resolved that the election of Wm. H. Seward, or of any member of the Black Republican Party, to the Presidency of the United States, ought to be immediately followed by the secession of all the Slaveholding States from this Confederacy, and the prevention of any organization of a Federal Administration under such a President.

The Legislature of Alabama have under consideration a resolution that any white man who shall be suspected of promoting sedition among the negroes shall be liable to conviction upon negro evidence, provided that such evidence be not in direct opposition to the testimony of white persons whom the jury may deem credible.

An Italian grocer, named John Grocchio, narrowly escaped being lynched by the citizens of Petersburgh, Va., last Monday, for saying that John Brown was a good and very useful man, and instead of being hung he ought to have been made President of the United States.

An Abolitionist in Clayton, Ala., was brought before a meeting of the citizens, whose sentence was to array him in tar and feathers and then ride him on a rail around the town. The resolution was carried into effect, and the Abolitionist was ordered to leave the State within two days.

The report that the Southern students at Princeton College burned John Brown in effigy is contradicted. The effigies of Seward, Beecher and Wendell Phillips were burned, and many of the Northern students took part in the proceedings.

The Hartford Times publishes a letter dated at Marion, (Ala.,) telling of the arrest and threatened lynching at Prattville, of one Albertson, who had been engaged in distributing incendiary documents among the slaves.

A bill passed the Mississippi House of Representatives on the 9th, forbidding peddling in that State, except by citizens of the State. A reward of $20 is offered for information of violation of the law.

Two of the free blacks in Staunton, Va., subscribed $5 each to the fund for the Harper's Ferry volunteers from Augusta County. A number of slaves expressed their desire to aid in the contribution.

[illegible] Reade [illegible] to New-York and for the consummation of Mr. Reade says the Governor himself thus instructed, he went to New-York, but did not deal through Germany, as he had been advised, but revealed the matter to Gerritson Smith, through the book-keeper of Hussey & Rand, carpet manufacturers, Worth-street, New-York; Mr. Boyden, lawyer; Theodore Sedgwick, W. F. McAuley, of Kansas, then on a visit to New-York, and the daughter of William Henry Burleigh. He then left for England, and often spoke of the matter in England and France, telling it, among others, to Mr. Vaney, Armstrong Cowell, at Havre. Having renounced Abolitionism, he sailed from France to New-Orleans, and from thence to Mobile in April last.

He says that as soon as he learned Brown's purposes, he renounced all notions of participation, and only acted with them because of his conviction that, having learned their plans, he could not have escaped, though the pledge of secrecy only extended to the forfeiture of the protection which the society afforded. Mr. Reade assures us that his renunciation of abolitionism is sincere, and that he has told his acquaintances here that should he remain out of the pulpit, he intended to make speeches, giving his notions of the horrors of abolitionism in the North, during the next Presidential election; and if not, then to publish letters. He assures us that he does know that Gerrit Smith sent money to Brown, the latter saying that Smith was cognizant of all his plans; that Dr. Howe and Theodore Parker, of Boston, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, of Worcester, and Hawkins, of Concord, were cognizant of his plans, and would sustain him with money. He says that Brown was a very secretive man and able leader. Mr. Reade mentions stopping in Cedar county, midway between Iowa City and Tipton, where he lectured on education and other subjects. He tells us that after leaving Cleveland for New-York, he never had further correspondence with any of the parties—this was in June, 1858. And when he returned to the United States he supposed the whole expedition had been broken up. He offers no defence or apology for the monstrous wickedness of the purposes of the association, but professes a sincere conviction of the great moral wrong.

We will add that we yesterday suggested to the friends of Mr. Reade the propriety of his placing himself unconditionally at the disposition of the President of the United States. We are glad to say that he has done so, and has also offered to surrender himself to Governor Wise, and has notified these authorities that he shall remain here until their wishes are known.

The New-Orleans Bulletin, in copying the above, says: "We have conversed with several gentlemen who knew Reade well while here, and they all believe him to be, now that his character is unveiled, the basest conspirator of old Brown's gang. He is extraordinarily gifted, both as a writer and speaker, and is a consummate hypocrite of the villainous Iago stamp. When we recall the rôle which he played here—his fanatic abhorrence of some of those trivial indulgencies incident to youth, the never-ceasing iteration of his filial love, his pious cant about little children, and the innumerable other traits that mark the snake-like sleekness of his disposition—we cannot but regard him as one of the most subtle foes the South could have in her midst. Brown and the others, true to their compact, made the desperate venture, but Reade, after having kept the oath of secrecy even while among the very people whose lives and property were threatened, now proclaims his complicity with the enormity of a bawd. In fact, as we learn from a letter from Austin, he is proud of his notoriety and regrets that his history was not known in that place before he lectured there, as then he would have had a much larger audience. To show the true character of the man, we may remark that within the short space of a few months he has renounced Protestantism and embraced Catholicity, and again returned to his first faith."
